NOTE BY THE PUBLISHERS.

THE Concise Bible Dictionary is based upon the Illustrated Bible Treasury, written by leading scholars in America and Great Britain, each one a recognized authority on the subject on which he writes (see list on pages iv and v). Its object is to supply, in the most condensed and convenient form, such information as cannot properly be placed in the concordance, but which is essential to the intelligent study of God's Word.

The Dictionary contains short articles about the Bible, its contents, chronology, language, text, the various versions, Life of Christ with Harmony of the Gospels, Life and Travels of St. Paul, etc., with numerous illustrations which not only attract the eye, but truly illustrate the articles where they appear, and help the student to an understanding which would be difficult to attain without them. The illustrations are mostly from recent photographs, and can, therefore, be thoroughly relied upon. The pronunciation adopted, and the diacritical markings used to express it, are based on Webster's International Dictionary. This will be found a great convenience, as these markings are familiar to almost every reader.

A combined concordance, subject-index, and index of proper names follows the Dictionary. The concordance is specially useful in this, that it contains references to the text and marginal readings of both the Revised and the Authorized Versions. Special sections on Messianic prophecies, quotations from the Old Testament in the New Testament, etc., are incorporated in their alphabetical places in the concordance. The meanings of obsolete and ambiguous words are given in all cases. The incorporation of all these features in the concordance has, it is believed, made it the most useful, handy concordance ever published.

At the end of the concordance will be found a Bible atlas, containing all the maps that are necessary for Bible students. These have been specially engraved from the latest surveys, and carefully revised by the leading authorities on Biblical geography. A beautiful relief map has been specially prepared from the raised map issued by the Palestine Exploration Fund. The position of Bible places can be easily ascertained by reference to the index which accompanies the Bible atlas.

KEY TO THE SIGNS USED IN THIS BIBLE DICTIONARY.

SYLLABLES are indicated by a hyphen (-), while those on which stress has to be laid are marked with an accent (′). In the case of compound names as given in the Authorized Version, the proper accent of each name is given where necessary, and the component parts indicated by a double hyphen (=).

For complete list of Proper Names see Concordance.

A

AARON [aâr'on], the brother and "prophet" (i.e. speaker) of Moses. From him descended, through his eldest son Eleazer, the hereditary class of priests (q.v.) in Israel.

ABBA [ăb'bâ] (Aramaic "father"), a name addressed to God in Jewish and early Christian prayers. It occurs thrice in the New Testament, with its Greek equivalent placed after it (Mark 14. 36; Rom. 8. 15; Gal. 4. 6).

ABEL [ā'bel] (Heb. "breath," "vanity;" in Assyrian "son," probably the original meaning), the second son of Adam, who was murdered by his brother Cain (Gen. 4. 1 ff.). He was God-fearing and righteous, and in contrast with Cain is the pattern of a worshipper pleasing to God, who on that very account has to suffer (1 John 3. 12). He is described as righteous by our Lord (Mat. 23. 35), and in the Epistle to the Hebrews (11. 4) stands at the head of the heroes of faith.

ABIB [ā'bib]. [See CALENDAR.]

ABIMELECH [a-bĭm'e-lĕch] (Heb. "father-king"). 1. Name of the Philistine king of Gerar, a friend of Abraham (Gen. 20. and 21.). As the name occurs also in the history of Isaac (Gen. 26.), and Achish king of Gath (1 Sam. 21. 10) is called Abimelech in the title prefixed to Ps. 34, it may have been a common title of Philistine kings.

2. Name of the son of Gideon, king of Shechem, made famous through the fable of the thorn bush — the earliest fable of which the authorship is known — which his half-brother Jotham made at his expense (Judg. 9. 7 ff.).

ABRAHAM [ā'bra-ham] ("father of a multitude"), originally ABRAM [ā'bram] ("exalted father"), the ancestor of the Hebrew people, was born at Ur Casdim, "Ur of the Chaldees," properly "Ur of the Babylonians," the site of which is now Mugheir, south of Babylon; or Ur may be Uri, which was the Sumerian name of Accad (q.v.). Contract-tablets show that in the age of Abraham Canaanite merchants — or "Amorites," as the Babylonians called them — speaking the language of Canaan (Isa. 19. 18) — i.e. Hebrew — were settled in Babylonia. In a tablet dated in the reign of the grandfather of Khammu-rabi or Amraphel (Gen. 14. 1), one of the witnesses is called "the Amorite, the son of Abi-ramu," or Abram. In migrating to the west, Terah did what Babylonians and "Amorites" were constantly doing. He stopped at Haran in Mesopotamia, a city built by Babylonian kings. The patron deity of Ur was the moon-god, whose great temple rose in its midst, and the patron deity of Haran was the same.

Even in Canaan, Abram was under Babylonian influence and Babylonian government. He first pitched his tent under the "terebinth" of Moreh, before Shechem (now Nablûs); then he moved to Bethel (now Beitîn), afterwards to Egypt. Egypt (q.v.) was ruled at the time by "Hyksos" conquerors from Asia, at whose court an Asiatic was likely to be welcomed. The Hyksos capital was at Zoan (now Sân), in the north-eastern part of the delta, so that a traveller from Asia would soon find himself in the presence of the Pharaoh. We are told that Abram was rich, among other things, in camels, an animal which was peculiarly Asiatic, and was not employed in Egypt till the Christian era.

ABRAHAM'S OAK.

In the Valley of Eshcol, about three miles north of Hebron, stands the traditional tree under which Abraham pitched his tent (Gen. 18).

From a Photograph by the Photochrom Co., Ltd.

When the patriarch returned to Canaan, he was deserted by his nephew Lot, who settled himself in Sodom, and so became a Canaanitish citizen. The Canaanitish princes of the vale of Siddim were in rebellion against their Babylonian masters, and an army was led against them by Chedorlaomer of Elam, suzerain lord of Babylonia. Under him marched Amraphel of Shinar, or Northern Babylonia, Arioch of Ellasar, and Tidal, king of "nations." [See CHEDORLAOMER, AMRAPHEL, ARIOCH, TIDAL.]

At the time of the invasion, Abraham was living at Mamre or Hebron, the confederate of three Amorite chieftains. When he heard that his nephew was among the captives of the invading army, he pursued it, with his allies, to near Damascus, and recovered the captives and spoil. The conqueror was greeted on his return by Melchizedek (q.v.), priest-king of Jerusalem.

Abram had a son, Ishmael, by the Egyptian "bondwoman" Hagar. The name Ishmael is found in Babylonian documents of the age of Khammurabi, king of Babylonia (q.v.). When Ishmael was thirteen years old, Abram and all his family were circumcised. The circumcision of every male on eighth day after birth was now to be the seal of the Covenant (q.v.) between God and Abram's seed. At the same time, Abram's name was changed to Abraham, the change denoting that Abraham was no longer a Babylonian. Soon afterwards, the guilty cities of "the plain," or vale of Siddim, were destroyed by a rain of "brimstone and fire." Abraham had interceded for the sinners in vain; Lot and his daughters alone escaped, and became the ancestors of Ammon and Moab.

We next find Abraham at Gerar, south of Gaza. In the land of Gerar, Isaac was born; and it was here also that "God did tempt" Abraham to sacrifice his only son—the heir of the repeated promise of a mighty nation that should possess the land of Canaan—as proof of his faith (Heb. 11. 17-19), on a mountain "in the land of Moriah." But the sacrifice of Isaac was stayed, and Abraham received a renewal of the promise: "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed."

At Hebron, his wife Sarah (Assyrian Sarrat, "queen") died. She was buried in "the field of Machpelah," which the patriarch bought for four hundred silver shekels (about $229.00) from the Hittites (q.v.) settled there. The details of this bargain agree very strikingly with the Babylonian legal procedure in such transactions.

Abraham now sent his servant to Mesopotamia to seek a wife for his son Isaac from among his kindred at Haran. Rebekah, the sister of Laban, accordingly became Isaac's wife. By his second wife, Keturah, Abraham was the ancestor of various tribes of Central Arabia. After this Abraham died, and was buried at Machpelah.

Abraham was the friend of God, the glorious prototype of the obedience and righteousness of faith; the father of the faithful, and the founder of the Hebrew race from which the Savior of mankind was to come.

ABSALOM [ăb'sa-lom] (Heb. "father of peace"), son of David and Maachah (2 Sam. 3. 3), through popular arts alienating the people from his father, at length raised a revolt against him (15-17), but was defeated by Joab (2 Sam. 18), and slain by him (18. 14), to the great sorrow of David (2 Sam. 18. 33; 19. 4).

ACACIA [a-kā'ci-ā]. [See Shittah.]

ACCAD [ăc'cad] (Gen. 10. 10), one of the four cities of Nimrod in Shinar (Babylonia). Land of Sumer and Accad is in the Assyrian inscriptions the common designation of Babylonia as a whole. [See Babylonia.]

ACELDAMA [a-çĕl'da-mā]. [See Jerusalem.]

ACTS [ăcts], THE, or THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES [ā-pŏs'tles]. Both titles go back to the second century, although neither was given the book by its author. The longer title is misleading if understood of "all the apostles," since the doings of only two, St. Peter and St. Paul, are described at any length. It is an historical work, of which the "Gospel according to St. Luke" forms the first book. This second book describes the stages by which Christianity spread from Jerusalem the sacred, to Rome the political, capital of the world. It takes up the subject of Luke's former "treatise" (1.1), the Gospel, from the death and resurrection of Christ, and covers the first 30 years of apostolic history.

Luke addresses his book to Theophilus, a Gentile Christian plainly, as he had done with his Gospel. The book is designed for the enlightenment of Christians generally concerning the historic origins of Christianity. It is in truth the first church history, the Acts of the Holy Spirit as wrought by the two great heroes of the faith, Peter and Paul. Around these two characters the narrative is focused. But these two great personages do not stand alone. The other apostles are mentioned by name in the first 12 chapters and later, but after chapter 15 they drop out of the narrative, for Luke follows the fortunes of Paul. The chief secondary features are Stephen, Philip, Barnabas, James, Apollos, and the minor characters are numerous—John, Mark, Silas, Timothy, Aquila, Priscilla, etc. Since its details, however, center around Peter and Paul, an analysis of the book which sets forth the work of these two apostles is the clearest. 1. Acts of Peter—birth of the Christian Church in Jerusalem and its spread through Judea and Samaria (1 to 8); first persecution, and the reaching out for Gentile converts (9.1 to 11.18); second persecution, and founding of the church at Antioch (11.19 to 13.3). 2. Acts of Paul—extension of the Church to Gentiles, including call of Paul and first missionary journey (13.4 to 15.5); council at Jerusalem fixing terms of admission to the Church (15); second missionary journey (15.36 to 18.22); third missionary journey (18. 23 to 21. 17); imprisonment at Caesarea and voyage to Rome (21. 18 to 28).

The book was very probably written before the year 70 A.D.

The author's personal acquaintance with many of the facts and personages of the history is shown by the marvellous vividness and accuracy of the narrative. The portraiture of St. Paul is so lifelike, and marked by so many touches of loving admiration, as to show the hand of a friend and disciple. The term "we" often occurs in the narrative (ch. 16. 10-17; 20. 5-15; 21. 1-18; 27. 1-28. 16), marking that the author was personally engaged in the incidents described. His tastes and ideas (so far as they are disclosed) are of the Greek type. Many little touches show an interest in medical details. All these characteristics agree with and confirm the very early tradition that the author was St. Luke, the friend and "the beloved physician" of St. Paul (Col. 4. 14).

ADAM [ăd'am], the Hebrew word for man, specially applied to the first man, the father of the whole human race (Gen. 3. 20; cf. Acts 17. 26). After the account of the creation of man and woman in Gen. 1. 62, 30, there is a second account in Gen. 2. Placed in the Garden of Eden (Paradise), he was tempted by Eve to eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, fell under the curse pronounced on transgression and having lost the Divine Image of perfect holiness was driven out of Paradise. Thus "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men." St. Paul contrasts with the first father of mortal men Christ, the "second man," the "last Adam," as the founder of a race regenerated by Divine grace (1 Cor. 15. 21, 22, 45-49; Rom. 5. 12-21).

ADAMANT [ăd'ă-mănt] (Heb. shamir; Gr. adamas). It is not known what is meant by shamir. Some have thought a peculiarly hard steel, others have suggested corundum (crystallized alumina), which is the hardest mineral excepting the diamond. The Greek word adamas (at any rate about the Christian era) denoted the diamond; but it is hardly probable that the Hebrews were acquainted with this stone during the time of the Old Testament.

ADDER [ăd'dẽr]. [See SERPENT.]

ADONAI [ăd'ō-nā'-ī], a Hebrew name for God. It is the plural of Adon, "lord," with the pronominal suffix of the first person. In reading aloud, the Jews pronounce "Adonai" wherever the ineffable name JHVH occurs. The combination of these consonants with the vowels of Adonai gives the usual pronunciation "Jehovah."

AGAPÆ [ăg'ă-pē] (from Gr. "love"), or love-feasts, the common meals of the early Christians which expressed the brotherly love that bound them together as one family, and culminated in the Lord's supper. Gross abuses of this beautiful custom, such as are condemned in 1 Cor. 11. 17 ff. and Jude 12, led to the separation of the Lord's supper from the love-feast in the post-apostolic church.

AGATE [ăg'ăte] (Heb. shebo; Gr. achates). The word is also used in the A.V. as a translation of the Hebrew word kadkod. The agate is one of the many varieties of minutely crystalline silica [see CHALCEDONY], denoting those arranged more or less in bands of different tints. From a very early period it has been used as a gem, and was often engraved.

AGRICULTURE [ăg'rĭ-cŭl'tûre]. The patriarchs and their descendants down to the conquest of Canaan were rearers of cattle (sheep, oxen, goats, asses, and camels). After the settlement, the western tribes learned agriculture, and the culture of the vine, olive, and fig tree, from the Canaanites. Among the crops raised were wheat, barley, rye (R.V. "spelt"), flax, cummin, fitches (R.V. "spelt"), beans, lentils, and millet (cf. Ezek. 4. 9).

PLOUGHING.

AHAB [ā'hăb] ("father's brother"), son of Omri, king of the northern kingdom of Israel in the time of Elijah, reigned twenty-two years.

He defeated Benhadad, King of Damascus, twice, destroyed his capital, and shut him up in Aphek, afterwards forming a treaty with him against Assyria. Shalmaneser II., King of Assyria, in his monolith inscription claims to have defeated Ahab and Benhadad with other kings at Karkar in 854 B.C. A year after this Ahab met his death in a battle before Ramoth-Gilead, in which Benhadad overcame both him and his ally, Jehoshaphat of Judah. The worship of Baal and Ashtoreth, introduced by his wife, the Tyrian princess, Jezebel, with the religious struggle this called forth in the country, and his robbery and judicial murder of Naboth, left in Israel a dark shadow on the memory of Ahab.

AHASUERUS [a-hăs'u-ē'rus], the name of the Persian king Xerxes (485-465 B.C.) in Ezra 4. 6 and the Book of Esther. The Ahasuerus of Dan. 9.1 was probably the Cyaxares of Xenophon.

ALABASTER [ăl'à-băs'tẽr] (Gr. alabastros). A more or less pellucid variety of light-colored marble, often banded or mottled, used for ornamental vases, etc. Matt. 26. 7.

ALEXANDRIA [ăl'ẹx-ăn'dri-a] (Acts 18. 24), the great seaport at the mouth of the Nile, founded by Alexander the Great about 332 B.C. He gave the Jews a quarter in it, and in the early Christian age it was the chief trade centre of east and west, and the home of literature and Greek philosophy.

ALGUM [ăl'gŭm] (2 Chr. 2. 8; 9. 10, 11) or Almug (1 Kings 10. 11, 12), probably red sandalwood. It was obtained from Ophir.

ALMOND [ăl'mond]. The common almond, whose beautiful pink-white flowers appear in January, are among the first of the year; hence its Hebrew name = "waking" (Jer. 1. 11, 12). It grows wild on the higher lands of Palestine. There are frequent references to this tree in the Bible (Gen. 43. 11; Ex. 25. 33-35).

ALOES [ăl'ōes], a perfume for garments (Ps. 45. 8; Song of Sol. 4. 14), and for beds (Prov. 7. 17); used also in burial (John 19. 39). Aloes was probably the gum of the eagle-tree of India. [See LIGN ALOE.]

ALPHA [ăl'phà] and OMEGA [ō-mē'gà or ŏ'mē-gà], the names of the first and last letters in the Greek alphabet. "The Alpha and the Omega" is used in Revelation 1. 8, 21. 6, 22. 13, R.V., as a title of Christ, Beginning and End of all things (cf. John 1. 1-3; Col. 1. 15-18. Cf. also The First and the Last in Isa. 41. 4, 44. 6, 48. 12, the title given to Christ in Rev. 1. 17, 2. 8, 22. 13).

ALTAR [ăl'tar], an artificial erection for the offering of sacrifices and prayers, originally of earth, turf, and unhewn stones (Ex. 20. 24, 25). The law ordained that sacrifices should be offered only in the sanctuary; but the Hebrews continued to erect altars upon the high places (q.v.), until the Temple (q.v.) at Jerusalem, with its altar of incense in the sanctuary and its altar of burnt-offering in the forecourt, became under the reformation of Josiah universally recognized as the only place where sacrifices could be legitimately offered. The "horns" of the altar, placed at its four corners, were its most sacred parts. The blood of the sacrifices was smeared on them, and they were clasped by fugitives who claimed the right of asylum (Amos 3. 14). [See TABERNACLE.]

AMALEKITES [ăm'a-lek-ītes], wild Bedawîn tribes in the south of Palestine, especially in the wilderness now named Et-Tih, with whom the Israelites were at feud from the time of Moses till their destruction by Saul and David. In the tablets of Tel el-Amarna (q.v.) they are classed as "plunderers."

AMBER [ăm'bẽr] (Heb. chasmal; Gr. electron). The word thus rendered occurs thrice in Ezekiel. It is almost certainly not the familiar mineral, a fossil resin of an orange-yellow color, which bears this name, but some metallic compound; possibly the mixture of gold and silver now called electrum.

AMEN [ā'mĕn' or ä'mĕn'], a Hebrew word meaning "truth" (Isa. 65. 16), used adverbially to express strong confirmation (cf. Deut. 27. 15). Its use as a confirmatory response at the close of prayer (= "May it be so") is illustrated in Ps. 106. 48; 1 Cor. 14. 16, etc. Amen, Amen occurs twenty-five times in John's Gospel, and nowhere else, and is translated "Verily, verily." The Amen—i.e. the faithful and abiding One—is a title of Christ (Rev. 3. 14).

AMETHYST [ăm'ẽ-thyst] (Heb. achlamah; Gr. amethystus). A purplish variety of quartz (crystallized silica), often used for ornamental purposes. It looks like a pale purple glass, but is rather harder. Ex. 28. 19.

AMMONITES [ăm'mon-ītes], a Semitic people settled north-east of the Dead Sea. The Israelites having seized, in the time of the Judges, a territory which they claimed, they were, down to the second century B.C., their hereditary foes. They are mentioned by Origen, in the third century A.D., as a still-existing Arab tribe.

AMORITES [ăm'o-rītes]. On the early Babylonian monuments all Syria, including Palestine, is known as "the land of the Amorites"; on those of the fifteenth century B.C., the country to the north of Palestine. They are represented on the AMORITE.

Egyptian monuments with fair skins, light hair, blue eyes, aquiline noses, and pointed beards. When the Israelites invaded Palestine, their first attack was repulsed by the Amorites, who were then, with the Hittites (q.v.), the chief among the Canaanite tribes. [See ABRAHAM.]

AMOS [ā'mos] (probably "burdened"), one of the minor prophets, was a shepherd of Tekoa, in Judah, and prophesied at Bethel in the reigns of Uzziah, King of Judah, and Jeroboam II., King of Israel. The priests accused him of treason, and expelled him from the northern kingdom to which his prophecies mainly refer, and whose downfall he foretold. [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

AMRAPHEL [ăm-răf'fel] (Gen. 14.1), the Biblical name of the Babylonian ruler Hammurapi (Khammurabi).

ANAKIM [ăn'a-kĭm], "sons of Anak" ("long-necked"), a race of giants, who, when driven from the mountains of Hebron by Caleb or Joshua, found refuge in Philistia.

ANATHEMA [à-năth'ẽ-mà] having been used in LXX. to translate herem—i.e. whatever is solemnly and by command of God given over to destruction—came to mean a man or thing utterly abandoned and abominable (cf. Rom. 9. 3 and Gal. 1. 8, where A.V. "accursed" is in R.V. "anathema").

ANATHOTH [ăn'a-thŏth], three miles north-east of Jerusalem, was the birthplace of Jehu and of Jeremiah.

ANDREW [ăn'drēw], ("manly"), one of the twelve disciples of Jesus, brother of Simon Peter, son of Jonas or John, was born at Bethsaida on the Sea of Galilee (John 1.44). He was one of the first among the disciples of John the Baptist to become a follower of Jesus (John 1. 37-40), who called him, along with Peter, while fishing at the Sea of Galilee, to become a fisher of men (Mat. 4. 18-22; Mark 1. 16-20). He appears to have been one of those disciples who, after Peter, James, and John, stood nearest to his Master (Mark 13. 3; John 6. 8; 12. 22). The Acts of the Apostles mentions him only in 1. 13. According to tradition, he suffered martyrdom in Achaia on a cross shaped in the form of the letter X.

ANGEL [ān'jĕl], literally a "messenger," and so translated in Luke 7. 24, etc., but specially a "messenger of God," one of the unseen citizens of heaven, who are continually doing the bidding of the Most High (Ps. 104.4; Mat. 4.6; Heb. 2.7). The "Angel of Jehovah (A.V. and R.V. the LORD)" in the Old Testament is Jehovah Himself in self-manifestation, the Second Person of the Godhead. The "Angels of the Seven Churches," in Revelation, are either the chief overseers, or else personifications, of those churches.

ANISE [ăn'ĭse] (Mat. 23. 23), dill (R.V., margin). Used only once, when the Lord rebuked the Pharisees for attending to trifles while they neglected weightier matters (Mat. 23. 23). The plant referred to is dill, as the revisers suggest in the margin. It is cultivated in the East as a condiment. By the distillation of its fruits (incorrectly called seeds) with water, the well-known dill water of medicine is produced.

ANT [ănt]. Ants are proverbial for the marvellous instinct which guides them in the economy, work, and discipline of their communities. They are small insects, but have wonderful muscular strength. Ants of Palestine store corn for winter (Prov. 6. 6-8; 30. 25).

ANTELOPE [ăn'tē-lōpe] (R.V., "Wild Bull," A.V., Deut. 14.5; Isa. 51.20), the Arabian species, with straighter horns than the African. The antelope is often depicted on Egyptian monuments. It is a beautiful creature, standing about four feet high; very wild and fleet, and fierce when hard pressed by the hunter.

ANTICHRIST [ăn'tĭ-christ] is in the New Testament a term used only by St. John (1 John 2. 18, 22; 4. 3; and 2 John 7). The idea was already familiar to readers of Dan. 7. and Ezek. 38 and 39, and in the apostolic writings is made prominent especially in 2 Thess. 2. 3-10 and in Revelation. The identification of Antichrist with the Roman papacy rests on the undeniably anti-Christian features of the developed Roman system. Not elsewhere within the visible Church (2 Thess. 2. 4) do we find such full antagonism to the fundamental doctrine of Scripture, salvation by grace through faith. No power has arisen within the Church that has so relentlessly "made war with the saints" (Dan. 7. 21; Rev. 13. 7). In his pretension to the power of miracle working (2 Thess. 2. 9), and his corruption of Scriptural teaching, especially of the doctrine of free grace, the "man of sin" is revealed, who, furnished by Satan "with all power, and signs, and wonders of falsehood," will sit "in the sanctuary of God, setting himself forth as God," and will be brought to nought by the manifestation of the coming of the Lord.

ANTILEGOMENA [ăn'tĭ-lĕ-gŏm'ĕ-nȧ] (Gr. "disputed"). All the books that are found in the New Testament were not recognized as canonical at the first formation of the New Testament library. The Apocalypse, for example, and certain catholic epistles (2 and 3 John, 2 Peter, and Jude) find no place in the Syriac New Testament.

Accordingly, the distinction arose between writings universally acknowledged by all congregations of the early Church and those books of the New Testament which, although known to all the ecclesiastical writers and sometimes publicly read in the churches, were not for a considerable time admitted to be genuine or received in the canon of Scripture. In some cases it was doubted whether the writing came from the hand of the Apostle whose name it bore. Of others it is clear that the original copies were not circulated as far as those of other New Testament writings, and this accounts for the fact that some congregations or writers at first did not include them in the list of inspired books. However, the longer these books were being studied, the more definitely they gained in favor among believers. The testimony which they contained of their divine inspiration finally led to their inclusion into the canon. The most ancient Greek manuscripts of the New Testament which have come down to our own times contain the Antilegomena.

ANTIOCH [ăn'tĭ-ŏĕh], (1) in Syria, on the river Orontes, a great city, ranking next after Rome and Alexandria, where the name "Christian" was first used (Acts 11. 26); (2) in Pisidia, visited by St. Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13. 14).

ANTIMONY [ăn'tĭ-mŏ̄-nȳ]. The word does not occur in the Bible, but stibnite (antimony sulphide) was and still is in the East a pigment employed for darkening the outer part of the eye, as when Jezebel "put her eyes in painting."

ANTIPATRIS [an-tĭp'a-trĭs] (Acts 23. 31), a city on the main road from Jerusalem to Cæsarea, named after Antipater, father of Herod the Great.

APES [āpes] (1 Kings 10. 22), imported by Solomon. Baboons, apes, and monkeys are represented in the Assyrian and Egyptian monuments.

APOCRYPHA [ă-pŏc'rў-phă]. The word Apocrypha means "secret" or "hidden," and is applied to a class of writings which have been definitely rejected from the books of the Old and New Testaments.

The word was first used by Jerome with reference to certain ancient Jewish writings, which were never part of the Hebrew canon, but treated as canonical by some ignorant writers of a later day. They are:—

1. Additions to canonical books and interpolations — Epistle of Jeremiah, Baruch, Prayer of Manasses, additions to Daniel and Esther.
2. Continuations of canonical books — 1 and 2 Esdras.
3. Romances — as Tobit and Judith.
4. Sapiential books — the Wisdom of Solomon, and Ecclesiasticus (or the Wisdom of Jesus the son of Sirach).
5. Historical books — the Maccabees.

In opposition to the criticisms of the Reformers, all of these books were declared canonical by the Council of Trent (1546 A.D.), with the exception of the Prayer of Manasses and the two Books of Esdras.

The Apocryphal Books are described in separate articles.

APOLLOS [a-pŏl'los], an Alexandrian Jew, who became a prominent teacher in the Apostolic ages. "Eloquent," "fervent in spirit," and "mighty in the Scriptures" (of the Old Testament), he had been a disciple of John before Priscilla and Aquila at Ephesus "expounded to him the way of God more perfectly" (Acts 18. 24 ff.). After Paul's departure from Corinth he preached the gospel there. Though one of the parties in the Corinthian church named itself after him (1 Cor. 1. 12 and 3. 4), he appears to have stood in a friendly relation to St. Paul (1 Cor. 3. 6), with whom he afterwards labored at Ephesus (1 Cor. 16. 12). He is last mentioned in Titus 3. 13. Luther was the first to suggest that Apollos was the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews.

APOSTLE [ă-pŏs'tle] (Gr. "ambassador"), in the New Testament the designation applied, in the first instance, to the twelve disciples of Jesus, whom He chose to be His constant companions and the nucleus of His church. Their names are recorded in Mat. 10. 2–4; Mark 3. 16-19; Luke 6. 14-16; Acts 1. 13. Of these Peter, who first recognized in Jesus the Messiah, and the brothers James and John are the best known. During our Lord's Galilean ministry they were sent forth on a mission (Mark 6. 7 ff.), confined to "the lost sheep of the house of Israel" (Mat. 10. 5, 6), and in later times they were distinguished as the "apostleship of the circumcision" (Gal. 2. 8) from St. Paul, who was called to be the apostle of the Gentiles. The risen Saviour extended their commission to all the world (Mat. 28. 18-20; Mark 16. 15; Luke 24. 47; Acts 1. 8). After the ascension the number of the apostles was not restricted to twelve (the "twelve apostles of the Lamb" in Rev. 21. 14 is a figurative expression). Besides Matthias, who took the place of Judas the betrayer (Acts 1. 21-26), Paul and Barnabas certainly (Acts 14. 14, etc.), possibly also Silvanus (Silas) (2 Cor. 1. 19; 1 Thess. 1. 1; 2 Thess. 1. 1; Acts 15. 22; 16, 19 etc.), are in a wider sense called apostles. An apostle was one who had these qualifications: (1) he had seen the Lord, and could bear witness to His resurrection (Luke 24. 48; Acts 1. 8, 22; 2. 32; 1 Cor. 9. 1); (2) the "signs of an apostle" — namely, "all patience," also "signs and wonders, and mighty works" (2 Cor. 12. 12), and the "seal" of missionary success marked his ministry (1 Cor. 9. 2); (3) he was given to the church (Eph. 4. 11) and "set" in it (1 Cor. 12. 28) by a divine call (Rom. 1. 1, etc.).

APPLE [ăp'ple] (A. V. and R. V., Song of Sol. 2. 3; 5; 7. 8; 8. 5; Joel 1. 12), probably the apricot which bears yellow fruit (Prov. 25. 11).

ARAM [ā'ram] ("highland"), the Old Testament name of Syria and Mesopotamia (sometimes used of Syria alone).

ARAMAIC [ăr'ă-mā'ĭc]. The Aramaic language is properly the speech of the people of Aram, who occupied part of Upper Mesopotamia, in the Bible named Aram-Naharaim, "Aram of the Two Rivers," or Padan-aram, "Plain of Aram." The language fell into two main dialects — a north-eastern, spoken in Mesopotamia, which afterwards developed into Syriac; and a south-western, commonly but erroneously called Chaldee. The latter is in the Old Testament called Aramaic. In this language Dan. 2. 4–7. 28, and Ezra 4. 8—6. 18 and 7. 12—26 are written. [See R. V. margin.] The Aramaic language was widely diffused in Western Asia, and took the place in trade which English or French now holds. Aramaic displaced the Old Assyrian in Assyria and Babylonia, and prevailed there till the Arab domination. Its prevalence as a medium of communication is attested by 2 Kings 18. 26, and by its appearance on Assyrian weights and clay tablets, side by side with their cuneiform inscriptions. In Palestine it steadily encroached upon the Hebrew, and by the time of the Maccabees had altogether displaced it in ordinary use.

ARARAT [ăr'a-răt], the country of the river Aras in Armenia; also the mount of Ararat, on which the ark rested after the Flood (Gen. 8. 4), 16,969 ft. above the sea. [See DELUGE.]

ARIOCH [ār'-ri-ok] (Gen. 14.1), in all probability Eriaku, King of Larsa in Southern Babylonia.

ARK [ärk] of the Covenant. [See TABERNACLE.]

ARMS [ärms], ARMOR [är'mor]. Down to the age of David the army of Israel consisted exclusively of foot-soldiers. These were probably divided into two classes — the heavy-armed, wearing helmet, coat of mail (q.v.), and greaves, and armed with a sword, one or two javelins.

and a heavy spear; and the light-armed, wearing helmet and corselet of leather, and armed with sword, bow, and sling. The metal which was earliest employed in the manufacture of weapons was bronze (in A.V. sometimes "steel," sometimes "brass;" in R.V. always "brass"), probably an alloy of copper and tin. The use of imported iron followed later. In the list given in Eph. 6, the apostle has probably the accoutrements of a Roman soldier before his mind.

ASCALON [ăs'că-lŏn] (Josh. 13. 3, etc.), a Philistine chief city, on the rocks by the sea. It was the birthplace of Herod the Great.

ASHDOD [ăsh'dŏd] (Josh. 11. 22, etc.), Philistine chief city, near Ascalon, captured by Sargon in 711 B.C., according to his record.

ASHERAH [a-shē'rah], a sacred tree (for which a pole was often substituted) which, with the Massēba, or sacred stone pillar (see Deut. 16. 21, 22), stood near the altar on every Canaanite high-place. As the deity was believed to be present in the Asherah, this itself in later times came to be regarded as a goddess, and was identified with Ashtoreth (q.v.). [See Deut. 16. 21, 22, etc., where for the A.V. rendering "grove," the Hebrew word is reproduced in R.V.; and cf. the note on ASHERAH in preface to R.V.]

ASHTORETH [ăsh'to-rĕth or ash-tō'rĕth] (plural Ashtaroth), the Phœnician goddess Ashtart, the female counterpart of the Phœnician Baal (Melkart), and regarded both as the goddess of war and destruction and as the deity of love and life. Her licentious worship was prevalent in Southern Canaan till suppressed by Josiah. Ashtart was derived from the Assyrian-Babylonian Istar, whom the women of Judah worshipped as "queen of heaven" in the time of Jeremiah (Jer. 7. 18; 44. 17–19).

ASP [ăsp]. [See SERPENT.]

ASS [ăss]. The domesticated ass, traced by some zoologists to the wild ass of Abyssinia, is depicted in the earliest Egyptian records, and also on the oldest Assyrian monuments. The ass is much more highly prized in the East than in the West. From early times, white (albino) asses were reserved for dignitaries (cf. Judg. 5. 10). The ass was the animal of peace (cf. Zech. 9. 9), as the horse was of war. It was forbidden to plough with an ass and an ox together.

Ass, Wild. Most of the Biblical references are to the wild ass of Syria, especially the descriptions in Job and the Prophets (Job 11. 12; 39. 5–8; 24. 5; Isa. 32. 14; Jer. 2. 24; 14. 6; Hos. 8. 9). The wild ass is untamable, and in fleetness far surpasses the horse. The allusions to its habits in Scripture are most accurate. The hunting of the wild ass is frequently represented in the Assyrian sculptures.

ASPHALTITES [ăs-phăl'tītes]. [See DEAD SEA.]

ASSASSINS [ăs-săs'sĭns] (Acts 21. 38, R.V.), a numerous body of desperadoes which arose in Judæa during the procuratorship of Felix, and afterwards took a leading part in the Jewish war. Their name Sicarii was derived from the curved dagger (Lat. sica) which they carried under their clothes, and with which they stabbed their opponents secretly in the crowds at festivals.

ASSUR [ăs'sur]. [See ASSYRIA.]

ASSYRIA [as-sȳr'ĭ-â], the Greek and Roman name of Upper Mesopotamia (now Kurdistan), named in the Old Testament Assur ("water plain"), "the land of Nimrod" (Micah 5. 6; cf. Gen. 10. 11). Originally a colony from Babylonia, it became, about 1700 B.C., an independent kingdom, which in a career of conquest absorbed Babylon, Damascus, and Samaria, conquered Phœnicia, and made Judæa, Philistia, and Idumæa subject states. Its original capital was Assur, on the western bank of the Tigris (now the ruin Kalah Shergat). At a later date the capital was shifted to Nineveh (now Koyunjik, opposite Mosul), on the eastern bank of the river; and about 1300 B.C. Calah (now Nimrud) was founded by Shalmaneser I., a little to the south of Nineveh.

The following is a summary of the Assyrian invasions of Palestine, as attested by the monuments. From the middle of the ninth century B.C. onward, Israel and Judah were, in the main, vassal states of Assyria. Tiglath-pileser I., (from about 1130) and Assur-nazir-pal (883–859), the builder of the great north-west palace at Calah, extended their power to the Mediterranean; and the latter's son, Shalmaneser II. (858–824), defeated Hadadezer (or Ben-hadad) of Damascus along with his allies, one of whom was Ahab of Israel, in a great battle at Karkar (854). In 842 B.C., Shalmaneser received tribute from Jehu, "the son of Omri." The Israelitish tribute-bearers are depicted on an obelisk of black marble now in the British Museum. PUL or Tiglath-pileser III. (745–728) in 738 received tribute from "Rezin of Damascus" and "Menahem of Samaria" (2 Kings 15. 19, 20). In return for the recognition of his suzerainty, he helped Ahaz of Judah (2 Kings 16. 7) against Pekah of Samaria and Rezin of Damascus (734–732), slaying Rezin and abolishing his kingdom, while he diminished that of Pekah (2 Kings 16. 9; 15. 29), and after Pekah's murder established Hoshea as tributary king (729). Shalmaneser IV. (727–723), to punish Hoshea's defection, besieged Samaria, but died during the siege (2 Kings 17. 5; cf. 18. 10), and the glory of victory fell to Sargon (722–706), who marks the capture of Samaria in his annals as his first military success. He carried 27,280 of its inhabitants into captivity, and put settlers from the east in their place. Judah also is mentioned in his inscriptions as tributary. He advanced to the Egyptian frontier, and captured Ashdod (Isa. 20. 1). Sargon was murdered 705 B.C., and his son Sennacherib (705–682) succeeded him. In 701 he led an army to Palestine, in order to punish his rebellious vassal Hezekiah. Tirhakah, king of Egypt, Hezekiah's ally, was defeated at Eltekeh, and the towns and villages of Judah were destroyed, 200,150 of their inhabitants being sent captives to Assyria. Sennacherib proceeded to invest Jerusalem; but his army was destroyed by the angel of the Lord.

Esar-Haddon (681–669), the second colonizer of Samaria (Ezra 4. 2), made Judah and all Palestine tributary, as his tribute-list, which includes the name of Manasseh, testifies. Under Assur-bani-pal (Sardanapalus, 668–626), named Asnapper in Ezra 4. 10, Judah's subjection continued, in spite of the Jewish king's revolt (2 Chr. 33. 11). Not till the end of Assurbani-pal's reign, in the general decline of the Assyrian Empire, does Judah appear to have recovered its independence, which, however, was soon afterwards lost, first to Egypt, under Necho, and then to Babylon, under Nebuchadrezzar. In 607 B.C., Nineveh was destroyed, and the Assyrian Empire came to an end.

Besides Assur (god of heaven), the supreme god of Assyria, and Ramman (Aramaic Rimmon, the storm-god), there were many other gods and goddesses, who were all of Babylonian origin. The Assyrians were distinguished as traders, soldiers, and political administrators, and owed their empire to the perfection of their military organization.

The discoveries of Layard and Rassam at Nineveh half a century ago, and the decipherment by Grotefend and Sir H. Rawlinson of the cuneiform character, led to the reading of the monumental texts of Assyria, carved on statues and obelisks, or stored in the royal libraries on brick tablets. The work, continued by G. Smith, by Dr. Sayce, and by many others, has given us a very complete account of Assyrian history, often illustrating the Books of Kings and other parts of the Old Testament. The names of Jehu, Azariah, Menahem, Pekah, Hoshea, and Hezekiah, are mentioned by the contemporary Assyrian kings.

ATHENS. (From a Photograph by Bonfils.)

ATHENS [ăth'ĕnz], the capital of Attica, the chief division of ancient Greece, and the seat of Greek literature, art, and civilization. St. Paul visited it in his second journey (Acts 17. 15; 1 Thes. 3. 1), and delivered a famous address on the Areopagus, or Hill of Mars (Acts 17. 22–31).

ATONEMENT [ă-tōne'ment], DAY OF. This was the annual day of humiliation and expiation for the sins of the nation, when the high priest made atonement for the sanctuary, the priests, and the people. It was celebrated on the tenth day of the seventh month by abstinence from ordinary labor, by a holy convocation, and by fasting. It was the only fast enjoined by the Mosaic law, and hence was called "the fast" (Acts 27. 9). The high priest, laying aside his official ornaments, first offered a sin-offering for himself and for the priesthood, entering into the Holy of Holies with the blood. He afterwards took two he-goats for the nation. One was slain for Jehovah. On the head of the other the sins of the people were typically laid; it was made the sin-bearer of the nation; and, laden with guilt, was sent away into the wilderness (Lev. 16; 22. 26–32; Num. 29. 7–11).

A. U. C. (Anno Urbis Conditæ or Ab Urbe Condito). In the year from the building of the city, i.e. Rome.

AUTHORIZED [ạu'thŏr-īzed] VERSION, 1611. The undertaking of this version sprang out of the Hampton Court Conference in January 1604. It was accomplished chiefly because of the keen personal interest displayed in it by James the First. Forty-seven scholars appear to have taken part in the work. The revisers were grouped into six companies, two meeting at Westminster, two at Oxford, two at Cambridge.

The principal regulations for the guidance of the revisers were the following:—(1) "The Bishops' Bible to be followed, and as little altered as the original will permit;" (3) "The old ecclesiastical words to be kept;" (6) "No marginal notes, but only for the explanation of the Hebrew or Greek words;" (9) "As any one company hath dispatched any one book, they shall send it to the rest, to be considered of seriously and judiciously;" (14) "These translations to be used when they agree better with the text than the Bishops' Bible; namely, Tindal's, Matthew's, Coverdale's, Whitchurch's, the Geneva."

It ought always to be clearly borne in mind that the A. V. was not a new translation; it was a thorough and scholarly revision of an already good version. The translators say in their preface: "Truly, good Christian Reader, we never thought from the beginning that we should need to make a new translation, nor yet to make of a bad one a good one . . . but to make a good one better."

The text of Beza's Latin and Greek Testament of 1598 most nearly represents the text the revisers followed; and the two English versions whose influence can be most clearly traced throughout are the Geneva Bible (1560), and the Rheims Testament (1582).

An eminent English critic, Mr. J. C. Squire, comes to the conclusion that "there is an established, an inevitable manner into which an Englishman will rise when his ideas and images lift into grandeur; the style of the Authorized Version." [See ENGLISH BIBLE.]

AVENGER [ă-vĕn'jĕr]. Hebrew custom, like that of many other early peoples, authorized and even required the next-of-kin to avenge a murdered person by killing his murderer (2 Sam. 14. 7 ff.). The Mosaic legislation aimed at mitigating its effects by providing cities of refuge (q.v.) to which a homicide might escape, and where he might claim a fair trial (see Num. 35. 9-32).

AZAZEL [a-zā'zel] (Lev. 16. 8, 10, 26), a Hebrew word found in connection with the ceremony of the day of Atonement (q.v.) and translated scapegoat, lit., "the one destined to go far away."

had its local Baal, who fertilized the land by his springs, and to whom, as divine landlord, tribute was due. The special Baal introduced by Ahab was Melkart, of Tyre.

BAALZEBUB [bā'al-zē'bub] (2 Kings 1. 2, 3, 6, 16), a Baal of flies, worshipped in Ekron, and noted as a giver of oracles. Beelzebul (A.V. and R.V. Beelzebub), which in time of the New Testament (Mat. 10. 25; 12. 24, 27; Mark 3. 22; Luke 11. 15, 18, 19) had become a name for the "prince of the demons," is an easier pronunciation of the same name (cf. Beliar for Belial, and Bab-el-mandel, the common pronunciation of Bab-el-mandeb).

BABEL [bā'bel] ("gate of God"), Greek form Babylon, the great city built on both sides of the lower Euphrates, which from the time of Khammurabi (2000 B.C.) was the capital of the Babylonian Empire. The Bible records its primeval origin (Gen. 10. 10), and the "Tower of Babel" has been found in its great temple of Bel. Babylon was to the Hebrew prophets what Rome was to the early Christian Church—the chief centre of the glory and ungodliness of the world. It is now a complete ruin.

BABYLONIA [băb'y-lō'ni-ȧ], the ancient name of Lower Mesopotamia. Sumerian or Accadian is the title given to the supposed non-Semitic language of Babylonia, spoken by its earlier inhabitants, the inventors of the cuneiform system of writing, the builders of its great cities, and the founders of its culture. They were dispossessed by Semites, who adopted and improved the civilization they found in the country, and intermarried with its population. The later Babylonians were, consequently, a mixed race. But the existence of a separate Sumerian race and language is doubted by some eminent scholars, who hold that the earliest known inhabitants of Babylonia were Semites.

Babylonia was divided into the two districts of Accad in the north, and Sumer (probably the Shinar of the Old Testament) in the south. Among its chief cities were Ur. Erech (Gen. 10. 10), Larsa (the Ellasar of Gen. 14. 1), Nippur, Sepharvaim (2 Kings 17. 24, "the two Sipparas"), Eridu ("the good city"), and Calneh (Gen. 10. 10).

The salt-marshes at the mouths of the Euphrates and Tigris (the Merathaim of Jer. 50. 21) were the original home of the Kaldâ, or Chaldæans.

The most famous of the early kings of Babylonia were Sargon of Agade or Accad and of Sumer, and his son, Naram-Sin, who conquered a large part of Western Asia (including Palestine). A great Babylonian library was founded in the reign of Sargon. Babylonia subsequently fell under the domination of Elam. This was put an end to by Khammurabi (the Amraphel of Gen. 14. 1), who drove out the Elamites, overcame the Elamite prince Arioch, and founded a united monarchy about 2000 B.C. About 1726 B.C. it was conquered by the Kassi, or Kossaeans, from the mountains of Elam; and a Kassite dynasty ruled over it for 576 years and 9 months. In this epoch, Canaan passed into the hands of Egypt.

In 729 B.C., Babylonia was conquered by the Assyrian king Tiglath-pileser III.; but on the death of Shalmaneser IV. (723 B.C.), it was seized by the Kaldâ or "Chaldæan" prince Merodach-baladan (2 Kings 20. 12-19), who held it till 709 B.C., when he was driven out by Sargon.

Babylonia revolted from Sennacherib, who destroyed Babylon in 689 B.C. It was rebuilt by Esar-haddon, who made it one of his residences; and it was to Babylon that Manasseh was brought a prisoner (2 Chr. 33. 11). After the death of Esar-haddon, Samas-sum-ukin, the viceroy of Babylonia, revolted against his brother, the Assyrian king, and the revolt was suppressed with difficulty.

When Nineveh was destroyed, 607 B.C., Nabopolassar, the viceroy of Babylonia, made himself independent. His son Nebuchadrezzar, after defeating the Egyptians at Carchemish, succeeded him as king, 605 B.C., and founded the New Babylonian Empire. He strongly fortified Babylon, and adorned it with palaces. His son, Evil-Merodach, who succeeded him in 561 B.C., was murdered after a reign of two years. The last monarch of the Babylonian Empire was Nabonidus, 555-538 B.C., whose eldest son, Belshazzar, is mentioned in several inscriptions. Babylon was captured by Cyrus 538 B.C.; and though it revolted more than once, never succeeded in maintaining its independence.

An annalistic tablet of Cyrus, now in the British Museum, describes the fall of the Babylonian Empire in 538 B.C. In June the Babylonian army was defeated at Opis, and Sippara "was taken without fighting." Gobryas, the governor of Kurdistan, captured Babylon "without fighting," and also the king (Nabonidus); and in October, Cyrus assumed the title of "king of Babylon." A proclamation of Cyrus says that he restored to their native lands the exiles in Babylonia, together with their gods. The Jews, who had no images, took with them the sacred vessels of the Temple.

The patron god of Babylon was Bel-Merodach, often called simply Bel (or "lord"), who became the supreme god of Babylonia. His minister and interpreter was Nebo "the prophet," to whom the origin of writing was ascribed. The chief goddess was Istar, originally the goddess of the evening and morning stars (worshipped in Canaan as Ashtoreth). Other deities were the sun-god Tammuz, whose supposed death was annually mourned by the women (Ezek. 8. 14); and Ramman, or Rimmon, or Hadad, the god of the atmosphere, whose name appears in Gath-Rimmon, etc. Dagon and Moloch were also imported from Babylon.

BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY or EXILE, the period in Jewish history from the carrying away of the people of Judea to Babylon in 607 to their return in 536 B.C.

BADGER SKINS [bădg'er] ("Seal Skins" or "Porpoise Skins," R.V.), used for the covering of the Tabernacle, and (Ezek. 16. 10) for women's shoes; probably skins of seals and dugongs, which were common in the Red Sea.

BALAAM [bā'laam], a Mesopotamian prophet, who, when summoned by the Moabite king Balak to curse, actually blessed, Israel; but, bribed by "the wages of unrighteousness," seduced the people into impurity. In the New Testament he is the type of the false prophets.

BALM [bälm], an odoriferous resin, highly esteemed in the East for its healing virtues (Jer. 8. 22; 46. 11; 51. 8). It was an article of commerce between the Jews and the Tyrians (Ezek. 27. 17).

BAPTISM [băp'tĭsm], a sacred ordinance of evangelical grace, solemnly instituted by the risen Lord, prior to His ascension, and designed to be a means, until His return in glory, for admitting man to discipleship with Him and having the promise of remission of sins and of the establishment of spiritual union with Christ through faith.

BARAK [bā'rak] ("lightning-flash"), of Kedesh-Naphtali, son of Abinoam, encouraged by the prophetess Deborah to take the lead in the struggle against the Canaanites, seized Mount Tabor with 10,000 men, and, rushing down the mountain, defeated Sisera's army at its foot and along the right bank of the Kishon, near Megiddo. A splendid "song of Deborah and Barak" celebrates the victory (Judg. 5).

BARLEY [bär'leў] was extensively cultivated in Palestine and neighboring countries from the earliest times (Ex. 9. 31; Lev. 27. 16, etc.).

BARNABAS [bär'na-bas] ("son of exhortation"), St., the surname given by the apostles to Joses or Joseph, a Levite of Cyprus (Acts 4. 36), who was sent by them to Antioch to confirm the church there. From Antioch he "went forth to Tarsus to seek for Saul," whom he had before introduced at Jerusalem to St. Peter and St. James as a new convert (9. 27). When he had brought him to Antioch, they remained there together for a year, and "taught much people" (11. 25, 26). Barnabas accompanied St. Paul on his first missionary journey, and on his journey to the council at Jerusalem, and afterwards at Antioch (15. 35). When St. Paul, starting on his second missionary journey, refused to take John Mark, the cousin of Barnabas, the two apostles separated, Barnabas taking Mark with him to Cyprus. St. Paul refers to him in 1 Cor. 9. 6; Gal. 2. 13; Col. 4. 10. The authorship of the Epistle to the Hebrews was attributed to Barnabas by Tertullian. The Codex Sinaiticus includes an "Epistle of Barnabas," which was regarded as canonical by many in the ancient church, but is held to date from the beginning of the second century A.D.

BARTHOLOMEW [bar-thŏl'o-mēw] ("son of Talmai"), one of the twelve apostles of Jesus (Mat. 10. 3; Mark 3. 18; Luke 6. 14; Acts 1. 13). He is commonly identified with Nathanael of Cana of Galilee (John 1. 45-51; 21. 2), on the ground that (1) Bartholomew is not mentioned in St. John, nor Nathanael in the other three gospels; and (2) Philip is in the first three gospels associated with Bartholomew, in St. John with Nathaniel.

BARUCH [bā'ruch] ("blessed"), BOOK OF, and Epistle of Jeremiah. The Book of Baruch, of which the Epistle of Jeremiah constitutes the sixth chapter in the Latin Vulgate, is written in the name of Baruch, the scribe of Jeremiah, and contains exhortations to the captives in Babylon, with promises of their return. The Epistle of Jeremiah, which is commonly attached to Baruch, is a protest against idolatry. [See APOCRYPHA.]

BAT [băt], classed among unclean winged creatures (Lev. 11. 19; Deut. 14. 18). It swarms in the numberless ravines, caves, and ruins of Palestine (cf. Isa. 2. 20).

BAY-TREE [bāy] does not refer to a particular kind of tree, but to a tree growing luxuriantly in its native soil, and is thus translated by the revisers (Ps. 37. 35). There is no ground for identifying the tree with the bay or noble laurel, as our translators and others have done.

BDELLIUM [dĕl'yum] (Heb. bedo-lach; Gr. rendering in Genesis anthrax, in Numbers crystallus). What is meant is uncertain, probably a gem, but some have suggested a vegetable gum, others pearls. Gen. 2. 12.

BEAN [bēan], used both as a vegetable and as flour by the Jews (2 Sam. 17. 28; Ezek. 4. 9).

BEAR [beâr]. The bear of Syria, little different from the brown bear of Europe, is still common on Hermon and in the Lebanon. Its ferocity, especially when deprived of its cubs, is several times referred to in Scripture (2 Sam. 17. 8; Prov. 17. 12; Hos. 13. 8), as well as its deep growl (Isa. 59. 11).

BEARD [bēard] (Lev. 19. 27). Beards were worn long and carefully trimmed. To neglect the beard was a sign of mourning (Isa. 15. 2); to pluck another by the beard was to insult him. [See also HAIR.]

BED [bĕd] (Gen. 47. 31; Mat. 9. 2). The poorer people in Palestine slept upon the bare floor, wrapped in their cloaks, or upon a mattress or quilt, which was rolled up and put away in the daytime. The wealthy used a wooden framework covered with cushions as a divan by day and a bed at night, and the more luxurious had bedsteads carved and inlaid with ivory (Amos 6. 4). The "bed" of Og (Deut. 3. 11) was probably a sarcophagus of ironstone.

BEE [bē]. The honey-bee of Palestine is very similar in appearance and habits to that of Northern Europe, but it is perceptibly smaller, and has more conspicuous black bands on the body; it therefore has been distinguished as a separate species, Apis fasciata, the "banded bee." It is extremely abundant in a wild state, hence Canaan was described as "a land flowing with milk and honey" (Ex. 3. 8, 17). Honey was exported to Tyre (Ezek. 27. 17). [See HORNET.]

BEETLE [bē'tle], A.V.; Cricket, R.V. In the A.V. the Hebrew word chargol, which occurs in Lev. 11. 22, is translated "beetle." However, the context renders it probable that some other kind of insect, akin to the locust or grasshopper, was meant by it. Although beetles are very numerous in Palestine, they are not mentioned in any other passage of the Bible.

BEHEMOTH [bē-hē-mŏth] (Job 40. 15–24), the hippopotamus, the Hebrew name being formed from the Egyptian name "water ox" (cf. the Arabic name "water buffalo"). An old Egyptian monument depicts the taking of the hippopotamus by spear and pitfall, the means now used by the Sudanese (cf. Job. 40. 24).

HIPPOPOTAMUS AMPHIBIUS.

BEL [bēl], the Babylonian and Assyrian form of Baal. [See BABYLONIA.]

BELSHAZZAR [bel-shăz'zar]. [See BABYLONIA.]

BERYL [bĕr'ĭl] (Heb. tarshish, Gr. beryllion). The beryl is an alumina glucina silicate, of a pale sea-green color, closely allied to the emerald, which, however, is a richer and brighter green. It was well known in classic times, but whether it is the stone meant by tarshish is uncertain. Since it occurs in Egypt (as does the emerald) this is not impossible. Both are considerably harder than steel. Ex. 28. 20.

BETHANY [bĕth'a-ny]—"house of dates"—(Mat. 21. 17, etc.), a village on the southeast slope of Olivet, fifteen furlongs from Jerusalem.

BETHEL [bĕth'ĕl] (Gen. 12. 8, etc.), "house of God," the site of Abraham's altar, near Luz, eleven miles north of Jerusalem. A sacred place under the Judges, it was the chief seat of the idolatry under Jeroboam.

BETHESDA [be-thĕs'dȧ]. [See JERUSALEM.]

BETHLEHEM [bĕth'le-hem] ("house of bread"), or Ephratah—"fruitful"—(Gen. 35. 19, etc.), a village of Judah, five miles south of Jerusalem, the home of David and birthplace of our Lord; now a flourishing town of 5,000 inhabitants. On the traditional site of the rock-cut manger stands perhaps the oldest existing Christian church in the world.

BIBLE [bī'blĕ]. The word Bible is from the Greek biblia, "books." The whole collection of sacred Scriptures was called Ta Biblia, "the books," par excellence. The Greek plural biblia came to be used in Late Latin as a feminine singular noun. Hence, in modern languages, it appears as La Bible, Die Bibel, and the like.

The Bible falls into two parts, commonly called the Old and New Testaments, instead of the more complete title, "Books of the Old and New Testaments." The word Testament is from the Latin testamentum, "a will," which was the Vulgate rendering of the Greek diathēkē, used, for example, by St. Paul in 2 Cor. 3. 14. Diathēkē, again, was the rendering in the LXX. of the Hebrew berîth, "covenant." The Law was based upon a Covenant (q.v.), and the Book of the Covenant (Ex. 24. 7) was the obvious name for a writing embodying it. And as the gospel is a new covenant contrasted with the old, we speak of the Old and the New Covenant when we mean the two dispensations.

The Bible is "a divine library," consisting of many books, given forth through many authors and "in divers manners," each having had its special occasion and mode of composition, though all inspired by the same divine Spirit.

The books are manifold in their literary forms, diversified in their subjects; yet united they form a compact mass of words of God, indeed, the Word of God. No "prophecy," Peter tells us (2 Pet. 1. 21), "ever came by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." The whole initiation is assigned to God, and such complete control of the human agents that the product is truly God's work. The men who speak in this "prophecy of Scripture" speak not of themselves or out of themselves, but from God: they speak only as they are "moved by the Holy Ghost." The Scriptures here, as in many other passages, are conceived as through and through God's book, in every part expressive of His mind.

BIER [bēr] (2 Sam. 3. 31; Luke 7. 14). The Israelites, like the later Jews, buried the bodies of their dead (Gen. 23. 19). The burial was within a few hours after death. Probably the wooden framework of a bed served for a bier, as the same word is used for both.

BIRDS [bīrds]. There are in Palestine about 350 species of birds, 26 of which are peculiar to that country. In the Law, nineteen (Lev. 11. 13–19) or twenty (Deut. 14. 11–20) species of birds, mostly carnivorous, are (with the addition of the bat) declared to be unclean. The birds caught for food were chiefly pigeons, partridges, and quails. The dove is mentioned in the Bible more than fifty times, and was the bird with which the Israelites were most familiar. Turtle-doves and young pigeons were the only birds used for sacrifices; hence there was a busy trade in them in the neighborhood of the Temple. There are many Scriptural allusions to the habits of pigeons, as Song of Sol. 2. 14; Jer. 48. 28; Ps. 55. 6; Ps. 68. 13. Dovecots made of pots imbedded in clay, are numerous in Palestine (cf. Isa. 60. 8); they are often placed inside the walls in the houses of the poor. At the present day partridges abound, and also wild ducks, especially in the Jordan valley; and the stork (Heb. the "pious" bird) is common on the plains. There are eight species of ravens, and various species of vultures and hawks are seen, especially near the Dead Sea. There is, on the whole, a deficiency of singing birds, though blackbirds, larks, finches, cuckoos, and Palestine nightingales (Arab. bulbul) are heard in spring. The other birds mentioned in the Bible are the bittern (for which the R.V., following the LXX. text, gives porcupine), the common cock and hen (not mentioned in the Old Testament, but common in New Testament times), the cormorant, the crane, the eagle (margin of R.V. gives great vulture, or vulture,—probably the griffon), the gier-eagle (the Egyptian vulture, or Pharaoh's hen, R.V. vulture), the glede (probably the buzzard), the heron, the lapwing (R.V. hoopoe), the kite (R.V. falcon), the osprey, the ostrich, the ossifrage (R.V. gier-eagle,—the bearded vulture or lammergeier), various species of owls, the peacock (imported by Solomon), the pelican, the sparrow, the swallow and swift, and the swan.

BIRTHRIGHT [bĭrth'rīght'] (Gen. 25. 31; Heb. 12. 16), a position of peculiar honor and privilege assigned to the eldest son ("the beginning of his father's strength," Deut. 21. 17). The "double portion" was his right. The birthright could be parted with (Gen. 25. 33), or lost through misconduct (1 Chr. 5. 1).

BISHOP [bĭsh'ŏp] (Gr. "overseer") is in the New Testament one of the overseers of a Christian congregation, and synonymous with presbyter (elder q.v.). In the course of the second century the chairman or moderator, distinguished from his fellow-elders as primus inter pares (first among his equals), concentrated in his hand the superintendence and teaching of the congregation, and the name of bishop came to be confined to him.

BISHOPS' BIBLE [bĭsh'ŏps'ˌbī'ble]. In 1568, the large, handsome folio first edition of the Bishops' Bible was published. It was prepared mainly by Episcopalian scholars, under the supervision of Archbishop Parker. From its rendering of Jer. 8. 22, "Is there no tryacle in Giliad?" it is vulgarly called the "Treacle Bible." The volume is printed in bold black letter. In 1571, copies were ordered to be placed in all the churches. The Geneva Bible became more and more the Bible of the people in their homes for private study; the Bishops', the Bible publicly read in the churches. [See ENGLISH BIBLE.]

BITUMEN [bĭ-tū'mĕn] (Heb. zepheth or chamar, Gr. asphaltos, A.V. slime). The name includes several compounds of carbon and hydrogen, from which pitch, asphalt, etc., are obtained. Bitumen is often stranded on the shores of the Dead Sea. It occurs at the base of Hermon, and there are springs of it in the Euphrates valley. It is also found near Nineveh. This substance is not necessarily connected with volcanic disturbances.

BOAR [bōar] WILD. Heb. chazîr (Sus scrofa). Mentioned with reference to its destructive habits in Ps. 80. 13: "The boar out of the wood doth waste it." Wild boars are especially numerous in the thickets and brakes of the Jordan valley, whence, when the river rises just before harvest, they are driven out, and play havoc with the cornfields and cultivated ground of the uplands. They are equally common in the southern wilderness, where they plough the ground for the bulbs which abound there.

BOTTLES [bŏt'tles] in Palestine were, and are to this day, commonly made of the skin of a goat turned inside out.

BOX [bŏx] is twice mentioned in association with the fir-tree and the pine (Isa. 41. 19; 60. 13). They grow together, forming the beauty of Lebanon. Some have it that the references in the verses are to the cypress; but the box grows also in Lebanon, and attains a considerable height. That the box is referred to is confirmed by the rendering of Ezek. 27. 6 by the revisers, in which the benches of the Tyrian ships are said to be "of ivory inlaid in boxwood from the isles of Kittim."

BRAMBLE [brăm'ble], Brier, Thistle, Thorn, represented by nine words in the Old Testament and three in the New Testament. Spine-bearing plants form a considerable portion of the flora of Palestine.

CHRIST'S THORN.

Branch in flower and a separate flower; branch in fruit—the fruit has a broad thin brim.

BRASS [brăss], Bronze, etc. [See COPPER.]

BREAD [brĕad] was commonly of wheat-meal, sometimes of barley (Judg. 7. 13; 2 Kings 4. 42). The meal was kneaded in wooden "troughs" (Ex. 12. 34); the dough was then mixed with yeast or leaven, and pressed or cut into thin, round cakes, then baked over hot stones or in an oven.

BREASTPLATE (High-priest's) [brĕast'plāte' (hĭgh'-prĭēst's')]. [See PRIESTS and GEMS.]

BRETHREN [brĕth'rĕn] OF JESUS, four in number (Mat. 13. 55; Mark 6. 3), during his life unbelieving (John 7. 3-7), were among the earliest members (Acts 1. 14) and missionaries (1 Cor. 9. 5) of the church. One of them, St. James "the Lord's brother," was an apostle (Gal. 1. 19; 2. 9 and 12).

BRIMSTONE [brĭm'stōne]. [See SULPHUR.]

BROOM [brōōm]. [See JUNIPER.]

BULL [bul], Wild. [See ANTELOPE.]

BULRUSH [bul rŭsh'], the papyrus, which formerly grew in the Nile, rooting itself in the river mud (Ex. 2. 3; Job 8. 11; see margin R.V., and cf. Isa. 18. 2, R.V.). It is now extinct in Egypt, though still found higher up the Nile valley. It covers acres of the shallow water in Lake Merom. The papyrus has a triangular stem eight to ten feet high, terminating in a bush of slender leaves, from which paper was made.

BURIAL [bur'i-al, bĕr'rĭ-al] was probably, as it now is in Palestine, on the day of death, or next day. As soon as death had taken place, the eyes of the dead were closed (Gen. 46. 4). The body was washed (Acts 9. 37), anointed (Mark 16. 1; Luke 24. 1; John 12. 7; 19. 40), and swathed in linen (Mat. 27. 59; Mark 15. 46). There is no mention of the Egyptian custom of embalming (Gen. 50. 2, 26) as having ever been followed by Israelites. In Old Testament times the dead appear to have been buried in the clothes worn in life. The dead body was carried to the grave on an open bier (2 Sam. 3. 31), followed by the mourners and professional wailing-women (Eccl. 12. 5; Jer. 9. 17-20; Amos 5. 16). Burning of the dead was resorted to only in the case of criminals guilty of the most hateful crimes (Lev. 20. 14; 21. 9; Josh. 7. 25), and was regarded with horror (Amos 2. 1). It was the greatest calamity to be deprived of burial (2 Kings 9. 10; Jer. 8. 2; 9. 22; 22. 19; Ezek. 29. 5; Ps. 79. 2, 3). Many passages of the Old Testament prove the desire of Israelites to be buried in the family burying-place ("with their fathers"), an evidence of their belief that their personality continued to subsist after death (Gen. 15. 15; 1 Kings 13. 22, etc.). The burial-places were graves dug in the earth, caves, or chambers hewn out in the rock (Isa. 22. 16), and closed with large stones to secure them from wild beasts. Such rock sepulchers abound in the neighborhood of Jerusalem. In later times the custom arose of whitewashing every year after the rainy season the stones enclosing the sepulchers, to prevent passers-by from being accidentally defiled by touching them (cf. Mat. 23. 27).

BURNT OFFERINGS [bûrnt'-ŏf'fĕr-ings], or sacrifices, in which the victim was wholly burnt with fire, in a manner designating it as the offerer's substitute before God, are mentioned as offered by Abel (4. 3, 4), Noah (8. 20), and Abraham (22. 2, 7, 8, 13). The law prescribed them every Sabbath (Num. 28. 9, 10), every month (28. 11-15), at the Passover (28. 19-13), on the Day of Atonement (Lev. 16), at Pentecost (23. 16), and at the Feast of Trumpets (23. 23-25). Free-will burnt offerings were sanctioned by Lev. 1. 13. Such were offered at Solomon's accession (1 Chr. 29. 21), and in connection with Hezekiah's reformation (2 Chr. 29. 31-35).

C

CÆSAREA [çæs'a-rē'ȧ] (Acts 10. 1, 24; 21. 8; 25. 1), the seaport in Sharon, built by Herod the Great in 13 B.C., was the residence of the Roman procurators.

CÆSAREA PHILIPPI [çæs'a-rē'ȧ phĭ-lĭp'pī], (Mat. 16. 13; Mark 8. 27), the name given by Philip the Tetrarch to Paneas, at the main Jordan source, and at the foot of Hermon; now the village Banias.

CALAMUS [căl'ȧ-mŭs], or sweet flag, was imported from a far country (Jer. 6. 20), and sold in the markets of Tyre (Ezek. 27. 19), and is still brought to the Damascus market from Arabia. Its root-stock is aromatic. It was a chief ingredient of the holy anointing oil (Ex. 30. 23).

CAIAPHAS [kā'ĭa-phas] (Mat. 26. 3. 57; John 11. 49; 18. 13-28; Luke 3. 2; Acts 4. 6), Jewish high-priest in the time of Jesus. His proper name was Joseph, Caiaphas being his surname. He was a son-in-law of Annas, high-priest 7-14 A.D. Under the Roman dominion the high-priests were frequently changed; but Caiaphas held the office long. He was appointed by Pilate's predecessor, Valerius Gratus (15-26 A.D.), probably about 18 A.D., and not removed till after the deposition of Pilate by Vitellius, governor of Syria, in 36 A.D. The statement (John 11. 49; 18. 13) that Caiaphas was "high priest that year" has led some to suppose wrongly that the high-priests were at that time changed every year. The usage of Josephus in extending the title "high-priest" to all those still living who had held the office explains how Annas is so styled in Acts 4. 6 and probably John 18. 19, 22.

CALENDAR [căl'ĕn-dar]. [For Table of Months and Seasons, see p. 15.] The Hebrews employed a lunar year of twelve months (1 Kings 4. 7; 1 Chr. 27. 1-15). A strictly lunar year would cause the annual festivals, as fixed by the calendar, constantly to recede from their appropriate agricultural seasons. The year was doubtless brought into correspondence with the sun by the intercalation of a thirteenth month every three or four years.

The year began in the spring, with the month Abib or Nisan; but there was apparently a civil or rather agricultural year also from the earliest times, which began in the autumn (cf. Ex. 23. 16; 34. 22; Lev. 25. 4, 9 ff.). Some time after the Exile the custom arose of keeping the new moon of the seventh month as new year's day.

Day was reckoned from evening to evening (Lev. 23. 32). The exact designation of the civil day was evening to morning (Dan. 8. 14; 2 Cor. 11. 25). The day was divided into morning, noon, and evening (Ps. 55. 17); or more precisely into dawn, sunrise, heat of the day, cool of the day, time when the women are wont to go forth to draw water, time of the evening sacrifice. The phrase, "between the two evenings," probably meant the twilight.

After the Exile the use of hours became common, and the day from sunrise to sunset was divided into twelve hours (Mat. 20. 1-12; John 11. 9). The night was divided into three watches: from sunset to midnight, midnight to cock-crow, cock-crow to sunrise; but in the Grecian and Roman period into four watches. A division of the night into twelve hours was also in use. A seven-day period is mentioned in the Hebrew and Babylonian accounts of the Flood. The Hebrews numbered the days of the week. The seventh day only was named, being often called Sabbath. [See TIME.]

CALVARY [căl'va-ry]. [See JERUSALEM.]

CAMEL [căm'ĕl], probably the first beast of burden reclaimed by man, has its home in Arabia, to whose natives it is indispensable. It is used chiefly for riding and for bearing burdens. The ordinary pace of this "ship of the desert" is 2½ miles an hour, and this it will keep up for 30 hours without stopping; but a dromedary not carrying weight will accomplish 10 miles an hour.

Camels' furniture (Gen. 31. 34) consists of a carpeted framework of wood placed on the hump, with paniers suspended on each side.

The flesh of the camel was forbidden to the Jews. Its milk is excellent. The hair is woven into a coarse black cloth, used for tents (cf. Song of Sol. 1. 5). With this material John the Baptist was clad. The two-humped Bactrian camel, the only one represented on the Assyrian monuments, is unknown in Western Asia.

CAMPHIRE [căm'phire], old spelling of Camphor (Song of Sol. 4. 13; see R.V.), is now known to be the henna-plant, prized for its fragrant white flowers (Song of Sol. 1. 14; see R.V.), and CANAANITES [kā'ăn-ītes]. Properly a designation of the descendants of Canaan, the son of Ham, inhabitants of the land of Canaan and adjoining districts. In a narrower sense often used for one of the component tribes (Ex. 3. 8, 17, etc.), which "dwell by the sea and by the coast of Jordan" (Num. 13. 29), and Phœnician inscriptions and Tel el-Amarna tablets show that "the language of Canaan" (Isa. 19. 18) was nearly identical with Hebrew.

The Canaanites were famous as merchants and seamen, as well as for their artistic skill. The chief objects of their worship were Baal (q.v.), and Ashtart, or Ashtoreth (q.v.). [See Phœnicia.]

CANDLESTICK [kăn'dle-stĭck'], GOLDEN [gōld'ĕn]. [See Tabernacle.]

CANKERWORM [kaŋ'kẽr-worm']. [See Locust.]

CANON [kăn'ŏn]. The whole collection of books contained in the Bible is usually spoken of as the Canon, or Canonical Scripture, any single book being said to be in the Canon or Canonical. We speak also of the Canonical Books, or the Canon, of the Old and New Testaments respectively. It is not, however, till the time of Origen, in the third century of the Christian era, that we find Scripture spoken of in such terms.

The word Canon means a "reed" or "rod," a measuring rod, hence an established rule. Before Origen's time, the truth recognized by the church had come to be spoken of as the canon or test of doctrine, and the books that were in accordance with the traditional rule of faith, and embodied it, were therefore said by Origen to be canonized or canonical. But, since the Scriptures themselves contain in written form this standard of faith, they themselves came to be spoken of, in an active sense, as the Canon, or rule by which other books or statements might be tested.

This twofold use of the terms canon and canonical thus implies on the one hand (1) that each individual book of Scripture comes up to or agrees with a certain standard, and on the other (2) that the whole collectively form a standard or measure of truth.

CAPHTOR [kăph'tôr], the original home of the Philistines (Amos 9. 7; Jer. 47. 4; Deut. 2. 23), by some scholars identified with the Kafti referred to in an inscription in hieroglyphics in the temple of Kom Ombo, in Upper Egypt, which was built by the Ptolemies, and excavated in 1892. Caphtor is supposed to be Crete.

CAPTIVITY. [See Babylonian Captivity.]

CARBUNCLE [kär'bŭn-kle]. This word occurs thrice in the Old Testament (A.V.) as a translation of different Hebrew words. What these mean is uncertain, but the carbuncle properly is a rich red variety of the garnet; the term, however, in early times included the ruby. The carbuncle was one of the stones in Aaron's breastplate.

CARCHEMISH [kär'che-mĭsh] — "fort of Chemosh" — (2 Chr. 35. 20; Isa. 10. 9), a celebrated town of the Hittites (q.v.), at the chief ferry from Haran to Syria. It is mentioned on monuments in 1600 B.C., and down to 717 B.C. Now the ruin Jerâblus (Hierapolis). Important Hittite remains have here been discovered.

CARMEL [kär'mel] ("garden" or "park"), a ridge running fifteen miles northwest from the plain of Esdraelon, and ending in the promontory that forms the bay of Acre; greatest height, 1,728 feet.

CAROB-TREE [kăr'ŏb-tree] (Luke 15. 16, R.V. margin), a leguminous tree, native of the Levant. The "husks" were its pods, which some take to have been also the "locusts" of Mat. 3. 4, whence they have been named locust pods and St. John's bread.

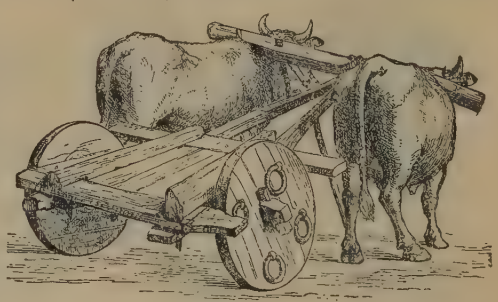
CART [kärt]. Goods were transported for the most part on the backs of men or of animals; but a cart, probably with two solid wheels, was also in use for carrying corn or other produce (Amos 2. 13).



Palestine Ox-Cart.

CASSIA [kăsh'ā] (Ex. 30. 24; Ezek. 27. 19), a coarser kind of cinnamon (q.v.). Here the R.V. (margin) suggests costus, an Indian plant with an aromatic root. The cassia of Ps. 45. 8 represents another Hebrew word, but probably refers to the same plant.

CAT [kăt]. The cat is mentioned only in the Apocryphal Book of Baruch (ch. 6. 22), in connection with the idols of Babylon. The cat was domesticated in Egypt thirteen centuries before Christ. It was there a sacred animal, and thousands of mummied cats have been found.

CATERPILLAR [kăt'ẽr-pĭl'lar]. [See Locust.]

CATTLE [kăt'tle]. Horned cattle were early domesticated (Gen. 4. 20). History gives no glimpse of a time when the ox was not the servant of man, while everywhere in the Old World feral horned cattle exist, or have existed, to recent times. [See Unicorn.]

The ox was used by the Jews for ploughing, treading out the corn in threshing, and for draught, and was only killed for sacrifices and for great feasts. Cows' milk was used, both fresh and slightly curdled, and also churned into butter, or in the form of curds, often called "butter" in Scripture. In the Jordan valley the Indian buffalo has been introduced, probably from Persia, in post-Exilian times.

CEDAR [çē'dar] of Lebanon grows also on the Taurus and Atlas Mountains. It was the king of trees (1 Kings 4. 33), the symbol of grandeur, might, loftiness, and ever-increasing expansion. Its wood was used in the successive temples at Jerusalem and in the palace of Nebuchadrezzar. The cedar of Lev. 14. 4 and Num. 19. 6 is probably an aromatic juniper.

CENCHREA [çĕn'chre-à]. [See CORINTH.]

CHALCEDONY [chăl-çed'ŏ-nў] (Gr. chalkedon), Rev. 21. 19. One of the many varieties of minutely crystalline silica, of a light, often milky, color, related to agate (q.v.).

CHALDÆA [chăl-dē'à], the plain of Babylon, or Lower Mesopotamia; once a very fertile land, now a barren, sandy desert. One of its great cities was "Ur of the Chaldees."

CHALDÆANS [chăl-dē'ans]. [See BABYLONIA.]

CHALDEE [chal'dee]. [See ARAMAIC.]

CHAMELEON [chà-mē'lē-on]. [See LIZARD.]

CHAMOIS [chăm'ois, shăm'mў] (A. V. and R. V., Heb. "the leaper," Deut. 14. 5), the moufflon, or wild sheep.

CHARIOT [chăr'i-ŏt] (Gen. 41. 43). The Israelites were familiar with chariots, as used by their enemies (Egyptians, Ex. 14. 25; Canaanites, Judg. 4. 3), long before they had them themselves. But David (2 Sam. 8. 4) and Solomon (1 Kings 10. 26) introduced both chariots and horses in ever-increasing numbers. They were two-wheeled vehicles, curved in front and open behind, in which two men could ride, one of whom drove (1 Kings 22. 34), while the other fought with bow or spear.

CHEDORLAOMER [ched'or-lā'o-mer]. [See ABRAHAM.]

CHEMOSH [chē'mŏsh], the god of the Moabites. [See MOABITE STONE.]

CHERUB [chĕr'ŭb] (plural CHERUBIM), one of the higher orders of angels. Like the seraphim, they are associated with the throne or chariot of Jehovah (Ps. 18. 10; 80. 1; 99. 1). In Gen. 3. 24 cherubim appear as the guardians of the approach to the tree of life. Two cherubim were placed on the mercy-seat or covering of the Ark of the Covenant in the Tabernacle and in the Temple, and figures representing cherubim were wrought into the hangings of the Holy of Holies. In Ezekiel's description (ch. 1 and 10; 41. 18, 19) they have a human body, with a head presenting the faces of a man, a lion, an ox, and an eagle, four hands, and four wings; the whole body of the cherubim and the wheels of the chariot being furnished with innumerable eyes. In Revelation the four faces of the cherubim are distributed among the four "living creatures" that surround the throne of God. [See GOSPELS.]

CHESTNUT-TREE [chĕs'nŭt-tree] (Gen. 30. 37; Ezek. 31. 8; R.V. plane-tree). It is a tall and majestic tree, growing near water in Palestine. From the globular form of the flowers and fruits it is often called button-tree.

CHITTIM [chĭt'tim] (also Kittim, Gen. 10. 4) is Greek Kition, the Phœnician port of Cyprus; the modern Larnaka. Hence Chittim is used in the Old Testament to denote the whole of Cyprus (e. g. Num. 24. 24).

CHRIST [christ] JESUS jē'sus]. [See LIFE OF JESUS, pages 53-67; His Life and Works, see Concordance, under CHRIST; His Names, Titles, and Offices, see Concordance, under JESUS.]

CHRONICLES [chrŏn'i-cles], THE FIRST AND SECOND BOOKS OF THE, are in the third part of the Jewish Canon, where they form one book, named "Words" (or "Acts") "of Days," i. e. minutes of events, lists of names, and the like. In the LXX they are divided into two books, entitled Paraleipomĕna, "things omitted" or "passed over." Their Latin title from the time of Jerome has been Chronica, "Chronicles." Chapters 1-10 of First Chronicles are purely genealogical, following the lines from Adam to David. The remainder of the Book and also Second Chronicles deals with the fortunes of the house of David and the kingdom of Judah. The narrative runs parallel to the Books of Samuel and Kings.

CHRONOLOGY [ehrŏ-nŏl'ŏ-ġy] OF THE BIBLE,

ABRIDGED FROM THAT OF REV. S. G. GREEN, D.D., IN The Bible Treasury.

THE dates in the margin of reference Bibles are those fixed by Archbishop Ussher (1650), and were first inserted in the Bible in 1701. Modern investigations and recent discoveries of Egyptian, Babylonian, and Assyrian records have led to modifications in some minor points.

The Royal Canon of Ptolemy (Claudius Ptolemæus, Egyptian mathematician and astronomer of the second century A.D.) contains a list, with the length of reign, of eighteen kings of Babylon, from Nabonassar, 747 B.C.; of Persian kings, from Cyrus to the last Darius; of Alexander and his two successors; of the Egyptian kings (Ptolemies) to Cleopatra; and of the Roman emperors to Antoninus Pius (140 A.D.). This Canon is invaluable for the comparison of the sacred and profane chronologies.

The Assyrian Eponym Canon contains a fourfold chronological record of that empire, under the names of officers annually appointed, from 893 to 659 B.C. The dates in this list are fixed by the solar eclipse of June 15, 763 B.C., possibly referred to in Amos 8. 9. [See George Smith's Assyrian Eponym Canon: Bagster, 1863.]

PERIODS. The history of the Old Testament may be divided into six grand periods:—

I. From Adam to the Deluge.

II. From the Deluge to Abraham's entrance into Canaan.

III. From Abraham's migration to the Exodus.

IV. From the Exodus to the Hebrew Monarchy.

V. The Hebrew Monarchy (a) undivided, (b) divided, (c) the Jewish Kingdom alone.

VI. From the Fall of the Monarchy to the Advent of Christ; including (a) the Babylonian supremacy, (b) the Persian period, (c) the "Grecian" or Macedonian in its two divisions, Syrian and Egyptian, (d) the period from the Maccabean to the Roman rule.

DATA. For the first and second of these periods there are no chronological data outside Scripture; for, although in the second there are occasional records from other sources (as the Egyptian and Babylonian traditions of enormous lapses of time), these possess no real authority. The Bible testimony has come down to us in a threefold shape: (1) the Hebrew original, as edited by the Massoretes (g.v.); (2) the Septuagint (g.v.); and (3) the Samaritan Pentateuch (g.v.). The testimony of the Jewish historian Josephus must also be taken into account. The end of the third period and the beginning of the fourth connect themselves with the history of Egypt; the fifth is marked by various synchronisms with the annals of Egypt, Assyria, and Chaldea; while the sixth stands in the clear light of history.

THE RECEIVED CHRONOLOGY. The dates B.C. of these periods, according to the "received" chronology, are shown in the following table:—

PERIOD.	DATES, B.C.	DURATION YEARS.
I. Adam to Deluge . .	4004–2348	1656
II. Deluge to Abraham	2348–1921	427
III. Abraham to Exodus	1921–1491	430
IV. Exodus to Saul . .	1491–1095	396
V. Duration of Kingdom	1095–587	508
VI. Fall of Jerusalem to Christian Era . .	587–end	587
	Total years A.M.	4004

First Period. — The earliest chronological statement in Genesis is a genealogy — "the book of the generations of Adam" (ch. 5). The following table gives a comparative view of the successive generations, as set forth in the Hebrew, the LXX., and the Samaritan texts respectively, with the statement of Josephus appended. The estimate is formed by adding together the duration of the several lives up to the birth of the eldest sons. The computations give the year after "the Creation:" the date of the Deluge B.C. has been very variously given by chronologers.

AGE AT BIRTH OF ELDEST SON.

YEARS OF THE ANTEDILUVIANS COMPUTED IN TERMS B.C.

The computation according to years before Christ has thus been made (on the basis of the Massoretic edition of the Hebrew text):—

Years B.C.
4004	The creation of the world	Gen.	1. 2.
3874	Seth born	"	5. 3.
3382	Enoch born	"	5. 18, 19.
3317	Methuselah born	"	5. 21.
3074	Adam dies	"	5. 5.
3017	Enoch translated	"	5. 24.
2962	Seth dies	"	5. 8.
2948	Noah born	"	5. 28, 29.
2348	Methuselah dies	"	5. 27.
2348	Noah enters the ark	"	7. 6, 7.
2347	Noah leaves the ark	"	8. 18.
2006	Noah dies	"	9. 29.

Second Period. — The following table exhibits, according to the different authorities, the second genealogy in Genesis: the "book of the generations of Shem" (ch. 11), to the time of the entrance of Abraham into Canaan. The chronological annals of this period, could they be satisfactorily obtained, would be among the most interesting and important of the series, comprising as they do the repeopling of the world, the dispersion of the nations, and the founding and progress of the great ancient empires, "Asshur," "Babel," and "Mizraim." The data are in Genesis 10, 11. For the early Chaldæan history the fragments of Berosus are valuable, notwithstanding enormous exaggeration in the length of the periods.

AGE.	HEB.	LXX.	SAM.	JOSEPHUS.
	Yrs.	Yrs.	Yrs.	Yrs.

Terah	130	130	130	130
Abraham	75	75	75	75
	427	1307	1077	1128

The Assyrian records, it may be added, make even the longer chronology appear too short for the events comprised within the period.

The periods in the life of Abraham, as given in the above table, are thus estimated:—From Gen. 11. 26 it would appear that "Terah lived seventy years, and begat Abram, Nahor, and Haran." But Abraham was evidently not the eldest of the three: for (Acts 7. 4) he departed from Haran when his father died at the age of 205, being himself 75 years old at the time (Gen. 11. 32; 12. 4). Abraham was born, therefore, when Terah was 130. The time of removal from "Ur of the Chaldees" (11. 31) is not specified; the duration of the abode in Haran (or "Charran"), the intermediate place of residence, is likewise unknown: the migration from Haran to the Land of Promise was the significant event, and has well been called "the beginning of ecclesiastical history."

The significant dates in the life of Abraham as fixed by Ussher, are the following:—

Year B.C.

1936 Abraham moves from Ur to Haran.
1921 The call of Abraham to Canaan.
1913 Abraham's victory over the kings.
1910 Ishmael born.
1897 God's covenant with Abraham; Sodom destroyed.
1896 Isaac born, Abraham being 100 years old.
1871 Abraham offers Isaac.
1859 Sarah dies.
1856 Isaac is married to Rebekah.
1836 Jacob and Esau born.
1821 Abraham dies, age 175 years.

Third Period.—Here the data are few and simple; although at first sight there is a serious discrepancy between different accounts of the last part of the period. According to the Hebrew, Septuagint, and Samaritan texts, the whole is divided thus:—

	HEB.	LXX & SAM.
	Yrs.	Yrs.
Abraham in Canaan, until Isaac's birth	25	25
Isaac's age at birth of Jacob	60	60
Jacob's age on entering Egypt	130	130
Israel in Egypt	430	215
Total	645	430

For the first three dates, see Gen. 21. 5; 25. 26; 47. 9. The fourth is more difficult. The Hebrew of Ex. 12. 40 reads:—"The sojourning of the children of Israel, which they dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years;" the Septuagint and Samaritan add to "Egypt," and in the land of Canaan, thus covering the whole time from Abraham's entering the land, and diminishing the period of servitude by exactly one-half. This reading is confirmed by the apostle Paul (Gal. 3. 17), where the giving of the Law is referred to as having been "430 years after" Abraham. The genealogies bear out the same view. See Gen. 15. 16: the enslaved people should return to Canaan "in the fourth generation." Accordingly, some of these generations are given in the history—e.g. those of Levi, Kohath, Amram, Moses (Ex. 6. 16–20). Most chronologers, with Ussher, assign the 430 years to the whole of this third period, and not simply to the abode of Israel in Egypt.

It should be added that the Egyptian records themselves up to this period, are too vague to allow of any definite synchronisms. Most modern Egyptologists, however, are agreed in connecting the oppression of the Israelites and the Exodus with the Nineteenth Dynasty.

Fourth Period.—This period comprises, first, the desert-wandering of forty years; then the administration in Canaan of Joshua and the elders; followed by the long period of the Judges, and the government by Samuel, until the designation of Saul to the kingdom. Its length has been very variously stated, according to the interpretation of the notes of time given in Judges.

After the settlement in Canaan, the days of Joshua are set down by Josephus as 25 years [Ant. V. i. § 29]. The days of "the elders that overlived Joshua" (Josh. 24. 31) are quite undetermined. Then followed a long period of struggle with surrounding tribes—oppressions and deliverances, which, according to the first view of Judges, seem to have continued through 410 years, according to the following table:—

OPPRESSORS.	YEARS.	DELIVERERS AND JUDGES.	YEARS.
Chusan (Mesopotamia)	8	Othniel	40
Eglon (Moab)	18	Ehud	80
Jabin (Canaan)	20	Barak	40
Midianites	7	Gideon	40
		Abimelech	3
		Tolar	23
		Jair	22
Ammonites	18	Jephthah	6
		Ibzan	7
		Elon	10
		Abdon	8
Philistines	40	Samson	20

If the years of oppression—111—and of the usurpation of Abimelech are omitted, this gives us about 300 years for the duration of the time of the Judges. This total does not reckon Eli (who was, however, evidently contemporary with the Philistine oppression), or Samuel and "the elders." The periods of servitude, occurring in different parts of the country, may have been partly simultaneous. That the apostle Paul seems to specify the period of the Judges as 450 years (Acts 13. 20) presents no difficulty in the light of criticism, the true reading of the passage (see R.V.) being, "He gave them their land for an inheritance, for about four hundred and fifty years: and after these things He gave them judges until Samuel the prophet:" the time being reckoned from the birth of Isaac to the beginning of the period of the Judges, and not, therefore, affecting the present questions.

Now, a statement in 1 Kings 6. 1 permits us to fix with precision the length of this fourth period. The Temple, we read, was begun in the fourth year of Solomon, in the 480th year after the Exodus. The LXX reads "the 440th," probably omitting the forty years' wandering, so virtually coinciding with the Hebrew. Now, deducting the three years already past of Solomon's reign, the forty years of David (2 Sam. 5. 4; 1 Kings 2. 11; 1 Chr. 29. 27), and the forty years of Saul (Acts 13. 21), we have 357 years as the total length of the period. Take away, again, 25 years for Joshua, and the result gives 332 years as the time of the Judges, including that of "the elders," also the administration of Eli (probably in part contemporaneous with the Philistine oppression), and that of Samuel up to the anointing of Saul. This, perhaps, is as accurate an approximation as can be obtained.

Fifth Period.—The Hebrew monarchy began with the accession of Saul, and ended with the fall of Jerusalem. The date of the latter event is definitely fixed by many concurrent testimonies as not earlier than 588 nor later than 586 B.C., "the nineteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar"; that of the former is more uncertain.

In attempting to form a self-consistent chronology of this period, it must be premised that the Hebrew often reckons a part of a year as a whole. Thus, if the new year falls only a few days after the beginning of a reign, those few days are counted as a year complete.*

The Undivided Monarchy.

SAUL (Acts 13. 21) reigned 40 years; Josephus says only 20 [Ant. VI. xiv. § 9]. See note in table below (a).

DAVID (1 Kings 2. 11, etc.), 40 years.

SOLOMON (1 Kings 11. 42; 2 Chr. 9. 30), 40 years.

The dates of the received chronology (Ussher) are given on the opposite page.

The Divided Monarchy, to the Fall of Samaria.

Here we may first take the period to the simultaneous deaths of Ahaziah (Judah) and Joram (Israel), 2 Kings 9. 22–27.

Judah—

Rehoboam.	Abijah.	Asa.	Jehoshaphat.	Jehoram.	Ahaziah.
17	3	41	25	8	1	= 95 years.

Jeroboam.	Nadab.	Baasha.	Elah.	Zimri, 7 days. Omri.	Ahab.	Ahaziah	Joram.
22	2	24	2	12	22	2	12	= 98 years.

The slight difference in the two lists is accounted for by the broken years reckoned as wholes; the following table showing the result.

Next we take the period from the accession of Athaliah (Judah) and Jehu (Israel) to the fall of Samaria. Here the comparative statements are more difficult.

Judah—

Athaliah.	Joash.	Amaziah.	Uzziah.	Jotham.	Ahaz.	Hezekiah, 6th year.
6	40	29	52	16	16	5	= 164 years.

Jehu.	Jehoahaz.	Joash.	Jeroboam II.	Zechariah and Shallum.	Menahem.	Pekahiah.	Pekah.	Hoshea.
28	17	16	41	7m.	10	2	20	9	= 143 years 7 m.

The Kingdom of Judah alone.

Hezekiah (remainder).	Manasseh.	Amon.	Josiah.	Jehoahaz.	Jehoiakim.	Jeconiah.	Zedekiah.
24	55	2	31	3m.	11	3m.	11	= 134½ years.

A basis for calculation B.C. will for the first time be found in this period, by synchronism with other histories. The fall of Samaria is known to have taken place in the first year of Sargon of Assyria, 722–721 B.C., and that of Jerusalem in the nineteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon, 587–586 B.C.: the interval, 134 years, precisely coincides with the Bible history. A backward reckoning will enable us to assign dates to the Hebrew monarchies up to the disruption. Important confirmation is also obtained from the record of the invasion by Shishak (Shashanq I., first king of the Twenty-second Dynasty) in the days of Rehoboam. The Egyptian monarch made an expedition against Judah, and captured Jerusalem in the fifth year of Rehoboam's reign. An inscription on the walls of the temple at Karnak records this campaign, with the names of many conquered towns and districts of Judah. The inscription is dated the twenty-first year of Shashanq, so that the invasion may be assigned to the twentieth, or perhaps a little earlier. The date of Shashanq's accession is uncertain: Brugsch gives it as 966 B.C., which would make the invasion to be about 947 B.C.; and this being also the fifth year of Rehoboam, the beginning of his reign would thus be about 952. But Professor Sayce gives circ. 925 as the date of invasion, making Rehoboam's accession circ. 930; or perhaps 940–930—a change involving alteration in the whole scheme.

The following tables contain in the first column the "received chronology," and in the second the suggested revision of dates. The last, or right-hand, column, headed K., contains the leading dates assigned by Dr. Adolf Kamphausen (Die Chronologie der Hebräischen Könige: Bonn, 1883), a very able attempt to bring the Hebrew chronology into accord with itself and with the monuments. It has been found impossible, however, to acquiesce in all his conclusions. Dated Events of the Old Testament, a Presentation of Old Testament Chronology, by Dr. Willis J. Beecher, may also be consulted with advantage. It must be understood that the dates in the earlier portions of the table are approximate only: cir.=circa, "about."

		Amaziah survived Jehoash fifteen years (2 Kings 14. 17). But Amaziah died in the twenty-seventh year of Jeroboam's reign. It follows, therefore, that Jeroboam had reigned conjointly with Jehoash for some twelve years. [See Josephus, Ant. IX. x. § 3: "the fourteenth year of Jeroboam."]

Very probably Jotham's partnership in the kingdom (2 Kings 15. 5) is not counted as a part of his 16 years, 2 Kings 15. 33, and Hoshea's rule began in the 20th year from the beginning of Jotham's coregency.

SIXTH PERIOD.

The chronology of the Hebrew people now becomes associated with that of the empires to which the Jews were in turn subjected. Babylon held the mastery until the conquest of the city by Cyrus, 538-537 B.C. The Persian supremacy followed, until the victories of Alexander. After Alexander's death, and that of his widow Roxana and their young son, in the division of kingdoms amongst his generals, Syria fell to the Seleucids, and Egypt to the Ptolemies; Judæa as lying between, becoming a prize disputed by both—first the EGYPTIAN power and afterwards the SYRIAN being in the ascendant. The successful resistance of the Maccabees to Antiochus Epiphanes established the quasi-independence of Judæa under the ASMONÆAN priestly line; and this in turn was followed by the ROMAN domination, under which the later Asmonæans and Herod successively reigned in Jerusalem.

B.C.
595-574. Visions of Ezekiel; dated from the "thirtieth year"; afterwards designated by the year of Jeconiah's captivity, up to the 25th (ch. 40. 1).

587. GEDALIAH appointed Viceroy of Judæa by Nebuchadrezzar; slain by Ishmael; flight of the remnant of Jews to Egypt under JOHANAN, taking with them the prophet Jeremiah.

562. Death of Nebuchadrezzar; accession of EVIL-MERODACH.

561. Release of Jeconiah from prison.

560. NERGALSHAREZER (Neriglissar), king of Babylon; son-in-law of Nebuchadrezzar.

556. Nergalsharezer slain in battle against the Persians under Cyrus. LABOROSOARCHOD succeeds, but is murdered within the year.

NABONIDUS, or Labynetus, king of Babylon; marries a daughter of Nebuchadrezzar ("probably Neriglissar's widow:" Rawlinson), and associates BELSHAZZAR, their son, with himself in sovereignty.

553. Daniel's vision of the ram and he-goat (ch. 8).

540. Siege of Babylon begun by CYRUS.

538. Babylon taken, "Darius the Mede" placed there by Cyrus as viceroy.

(b) THE PERSIAN SUPREMACY.

536. Cyrus issues his proclamation for the return of the Jews. End of the Seventy Years' Captivity.

ZERUBBABEL, governor of Judæa: Joshua, or Jeshua, high-priest.

535. Foundation of the second Temple laid (Ezra 3. 8).

529. Death of Cyrus: accession of CAMBYSES.

522. Accession of (Pseudo) SMERDIS, "the Magian," called Artaxerxes (Ezra 4. 7, 11, 23). At the instance of the Jews' enemies, the Samaritans, the building of the Temple is stopped.

521. The usurper slain; accession of DARIUS, son of Hystaspes.

520. Stirring appeals of Haggai and Zechariah. Building of the Temple recommenced by authority of Darius.

515. The Temple completed, and dedicated in the month Adar (Feb.-Mar.).

490. Darius invades Greece: defeated at Marathon.

485. Accession of XERXES, called Ahasuerus in the Book of Esther; "exceeding friendly to the Jews" [Jos., Ant. XI. v. § 1].

480. Invasion of Greece by Xerxes; battle of Thermopylæ; defeat at Salamis.

478. ESTHER made queen by Xerxes.

473. Promotion of Mordecai; plot and death of Haman; deliverance of the Jews; Feast of Purim instituted.

Accession of ARTAXERXES LONGIMANUS, the Artaxerxes of Ezra 7, and of the Book of Nehemiah.

465. Decree of Artaxerxes in favour of Ezra, and for the restoration of the Jewish state.

458. Commission of Nehemiah to Jerusalem.

445. Rebuilding of the wall of Jerusalem; completed on the 25th of the month Elul (Aug.-Sept.). Solemn assembly on the 1st of Tisri (Sept.-Oct.).

444. Nehemiah returns to Persia.

434. Second visit of Nehemiah to Jerusalem.

432. End of Old Testament history.

424. Death of Artaxerxes.

409. Manasseh the priest builds a rival circ. temple on Mount Gerizim.

400. The prophet Malachi.

Darius Nothus is called "Darius the Persian" in Neh. 12. 22, probably to distinguish him from Darius the Mede (Dan. 6. 1).

337. PHILIP of Macedon appointed general of the Greeks.

335. ALEXANDER "the Great," son of Philip, succeeds, and enters on his victorious campaign against Persia.

333. Visit of Alexander to Jerusalem, according to Josephus [Ant. XI. viii. §§ 4, 5]; interview with the high-priest Jaddua (account very doubtful).

332. City of Alexandria founded.

330. Final defeat of Darius at Arbela. Darius assassinated.

323. Death of Alexander at Babylon, at the age of thirty-three.

(c) GRECIAN OR MACEDONIAN SUPREMACY.

Alexander left no legitimate successor, his only son being born after his death. After more than ten years of rivalry and conflict between the Macedonian generals, Syria and Egypt were made independent kingdoms—Judæa being subject alternately to each, until the time of the Maccabees. The Seleucids reigned from Antioch, the Ptolemies from Alexandria.

67. Aristobulus escapes from Rome, and renews his contest with his brother. The Roman general Gabinius interferes, and deposes Hyrcanus.

54. Crassus plunders the Temple.

47. Hyrcanus restored to the priesthood by Julius Cæsar, whom he had aided in the Egyptian campaign of 48 B.C.

ANTIPATER, the Idumæan, appointed procurator of Judæa. Father of Herod. First mention of the Sanhedrin.

40. Hyrcanus deposed by his nephew ANTIGONUS, son of Aristobulus, by the aid of a Parthian force. Antigonus the last of the Asmonœan priest-princes.

37. HEROD "the Great," having obtained the support of Antony, captures Jerusalem, and puts Antigonus to death, himself assuming the title of King of the Jews. Herod allies himself with the Asmonæan house by his marriage with Mariamne, grand-daughter of Hyrcanus.

34. Hillel and Shammai, teachers in Jerusalem.

31. Execution of Hyrcanus by Herod's orders.

31. AUGUSTUS (Octavianus), Roman emperor. He greatly increases Herod's power, and extends his dominion.

29. Mariamne executed by Herod's orders.

25. Samaria (Sebaste) rebuilt by Herod.

18. Herod begins to restore and beautify the Temple. He also rebuilds the Samaritan temple [Ant. XV. viii. § 5], and erects a heathen temple at Cæsarea [XV. ix. § 6].

6. Alexander and Aristobulus, sons of Herod, put to death.

4. Antipater, Herod's eldest son, executed only five days before the death of Herod himself.

4. BIRTH OF JESUS CHRIST.

4. Death of Herod; division of his kingdom among his sons — Judæa to ARCHELAUS; Galilee and Peræa to HEROD ANTIPAS; NE. Palestine to PHILIP.

CHRONOLOGY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT. The date of the birth of Jesus Christ, the central event in the world's history, was first fixed, in the sixth century A.D., by Dionysius Exiguus, a Roman monk, in the year 753 after the building of Rome (A.U.C., Anno urbis conditæ). That this was not the exact year of our Lord's birth has been abundantly proved; but the use of the date all over Christendom is too firmly established to be changed. It is certain from St. Matthew that our Lord was born before the death of Herod the Great (spring of 750 A.U.C.). The Nativity can scarcely be placed later than the autumn of 749 A.U.C. (B.C. 5–4). For the date December 25, there is no direct evidence whatever.

Synchronisms with Roman History.

1. Cyrenius (Quirinus), legate of Syria (Luke 2. 2). He was appointed when Archelaus was deposed (6 A.D.), to carry out the census. But it has been shown by Dr. A. W. Zumpt that Quirinus was in all probability twice governor of Syria, the first time in 753 A.U.C.

2. The fifteenth year of Tiberius (Luke 3. 1). This must be reckoned from the time when he was associated with Augustus in the government (765 A.U.C.), and gives 780 A.U.C., or 27 A.D. for John's ministry.

3. The forty-sixth year from the beginning of the Temple restoration by Herod, 18 B.C. (John 2. 20), would be 27 or 28 A.D. (It was not completed until the time of Herod Agrippa II., in 64 A.D.)

4. The death of Herod Agrippa I. took place in 44 A.D.

5. Claudius expelled the Jews (with sorcerers and astrologers) from Rome in 52 A.D.

6. Felix was appointed Procurator in 52 A.D.

7. The persecution under Nero began in 64 A.D.

B.C.

4. Birth of Christ.

C. Sentius Saturninus, legate of Syria, succeeded (3 B.C.) by P. Quintilius Varus, with whom, it is highly probable, was associated P. Sulpicius Quirinus.

A.D. 6. Deposition of Archelaus. Judæa made a Roman province under procurators. Herod Antipas continues vassal king in Galilee and Peræa. Cyrenius (Publius Sulpicius Quirinus), legate of Syria, carries out the census or "taxing."

CHRYSOLITE [chrȳs'ō-līte] (Gr. chrysolithus). Properly this is a greenish-yellow gem, a variety of olivine (a ferromagnesian silicate), which is obtained in a district of Egypt; but in early times the name was usually applied to the Oriental topaz, a yellow variety of corundum. [See Adamant.]

CHRYSOPRASE [chrȳs'ō-prāse] (Gr. chrysoprasos). An apple-green variety of chalcedony (q.v.), but the name probably denotes some other greenish stone. As the turquoise, an opaque, rather pale green or blue stone, is found in the neighbourhood of Sinai, this may have been known to the Jews.

CHURCH [chûrch], the translation in the A.V. and R.V. of Gr. Ekklēsia, an assembly. In the New Testament it is used in the following senses:

1. An ordinary public meeting (Acts 19. 32, 39, 41).

2. The congregation of the Israelites under the Old Testament (Acts 7. 38).

3. A meeting of Christians for worship (1 Cor. 11. 17; 14. 19, 34, 35).

4. The company of Christians associated for the worship and service of God in a particular locality or region (Acts 5. 11; 8. 3, etc.).

5. The whole body of Christians throughout the world (1 Cor. 15. 9; Gal. 1. 13; Mat. 16. 18), the body of Jesus Christ, sanctified by His Word.

CIRCUMCISION [çĭr'cŭm-çĭs'ion]. [See ABRAHAM, also JUDAIZERS.]

CITIES [çĭt'ĭęs] OF REFUGE. These were Hebron, Shechem, Golan, Kedesh, Bezer, and Ramoth-Gilead. [See AVENGER.]

CLOKE [clōke] (Isa. 59. 17, Mat. 5. 40, and elsewhere "robe," "mantle," "garment"), the loose outer dress of the Hebrews, originally a long strip of thick hairskin or cloth thrown over the shoulders. In later times it was fitted to the body, and often embroidered. It was thrown aside during active exertion. The Law permitted a creditor to seize this outer garment, but not the inner one (Ex. 22. 26, 27).

COAT [cōat] (Gen. 37. 3; Mat. 5. 40), the tunic or under-garment made of coarse woollen or linen cloth, close fitting, and girt round the loins with a girdle.

COAT OF MAIL (1 Sam. 17. 5, etc.), a sleeveless jerkin made (1) of skin or leather; or (2) of small plates of bronze or iron, sewn on leather or fastened together in rows. [See ARMS, ARMOR.]

COLOSSIANS [co-lŏs'-sĭ-ans], Epistle to the. Colossæ was situated in south-west Phrygia, on the river Lycus, and on the great trade route to the East. In the fifth century B.C. great and prosperous, it was gradually dwarfed by Laodicea, ten miles down the river. The church at Colossæ was known to St. Paul only by report, and was probably founded by his "beloved fellow-servant" Epaphras. The epistle was occasioned (61 B.C.) by the appearance at Colossæ of teachers who sought to engraft upon Christianity a kind of Jewish "philosophy," and to bring the converts under the bondage of "the commandments and doctrines of men."

COMFORTER [cum'-fēr-tēr], a title of the Holy Spirit which occurs four times in John's Gospel. R. V. margin gives "Advocate" or "Helper."

COMMANDMENTS [cŏm-mȧnd'ments], Ten, or "Ten Words" (Gr. "Decalogue"), as they are called in Ex. 34. 28, are given in Ex. 20. 1 to 17 (where they are prefixed to the "book of the covenant," Ex. 20. 22-23.), and also in Deut. 5. 1-21. The Ten Commandments were written on two tables of stone, called "the tables of the covenant" (Deut. 9. 9, 11; Heb. 9. 4), and "the testimony" (Ex. 25. 16, etc.), and were given to Moses during his sojourn of 40 days on Sinai. At the foot of the mount, when Moses saw the golden calf and the dancing multitude about it, he cast the tables out of his hands and broke them in pieces. Through the intercession of Moses, the wrath of Jehovah was averted from Israel; and Jehovah invited Moses to ascend the mount with two new tables, on which He would write the words that were on the first tables. Moses was commanded to write the special precepts given by God during this interview; but the Ten Commandments were written on the stone tables by God Himself. These precious tables were later deposited in the Ark of the Covenant. Thus in every way possible the decalogue was exalted as the most important precepts of the Mosaic legislation.

CONEY [cō'nĕy] (Heb. "the hider"), an animal forbidden as food by the Law. Not unlike the rabbit in size and in habits, it has no connection with it. Its habit of dwelling in the rocks for security, and its helpless, defenseless nature, are referred to in Ps. 104. 18 and Prov. 30. 26.

COPPER [cŏp'pĕr] (Heb. necosheth, Gr. chalcos). The word in the A.V. is generally translated "brass," but that it means this material (a compound of copper and zinc) is most improbable. In some cases, where hardness was not important, it may have signified copper; in others no doubt it was the alloy called bronze (about one part of tin to nine of copper). Bronze has been known from a remote antiquity, and was employed before the art of working in iron was discovered, for purposes offensive and defensive, ornamental and domestic; in fact, it took the place held by iron at the present day. Palestine is not a metalliferous country, but ores of copper occur in Sinai, and the mines (about Wady Igne and Wady Sarabit) were for long worked by the Egyptians.

CORAL [cŏr'al]. Twice mentioned in the Bible (Job 28. 18; Ezek. 27. 16) as an article of great value. The red coral of commerce (Corallium rubrum) occurs in many parts of the Mediterranean with a rocky bottom, and is obtained by divers or by dredging. It consists of a hard, horny stock, irregularly branched, which may grow to a height of one foot, and to the thickness of the little finger of a man's hand. This stock is firmly attached to a rock, and is the common base to which innumerable small animals, of the structure of the sea-anemone, the polyps, are attached, all of which participate in the forming of the stock.

RED CORAL.

CORBAN [cŏr'bȧn] (Mark 7. 11), a Hebrew word which, in Lev. 2. 1, is translated "offering," R. V. "oblation;" hence referring to any article or possession solemnly dedicated to God. Our Lord rebuked those who adopted this device to escape the necessity of supporting their parents. [See TREASURY OR TREASURE (b).]

CORIANDER [cō'rĭ-ăn'der] (Ex. 16. 31 and Num. 11. 7), an annual plant, with seeds used as a spice.

CORINTH [cŏr'inth), a city of Southern Greece, 40 miles south-west of Athens. Cenchreæ was its eastern harbor. Destroyed by the Romans in 146 B.C., it was rebuilt by Julius Cæsar in 46 B.C., and peopled by a colony of veterans and others. Situated on the isthmus which had always formed the highway of commerce between Asia and Italy, it became the metropolis of the Roman province of Achaia, and the meeting-place of all the social forces of the age, and of all the licentiousness that had been the shame or the religion of other lands.

CORINTHIANS [eo-rĭn'thĭ-ans], the First and Second Epistles to the, were written by St. Paul to the church he founded during his stay at Corinth in 52–54 A.D. He was succeeded at Corinth by Apollos, who continued his work. Judaizing tendencies appeared here as elsewhere, and the church became divided into four parties (1 Cor. 1. 12). To correct these and other disorders, and in reply to certain questions which the church had asked of him by letter, St. Paul wrote the first epistle from Ephesus in the autumn of 55 A.D.

Learning from Titus in Macedonia in the autumn of the year 56 A.D. that his first epistle had had on the whole the effect he desired, but that a minority, influenced by schismatic teachers, opposed his influence and depreciated his apostolic authority, St. Paul wrote his second epistle, in which he pours forth all the love of his heart for his converts and his righteous indignation against his adversaries. These two epistles, more than any others, reveal to us the personality of their writer, and also the inner life of a great Christian congregation in the apostolic age.

CORN [eôrn] (R.V. [Amer.] suggests grain in every case). Wheat, barley, millet, and spelt are grown in Palestine. Eleven different Hebrew words are used in the Bible for corn.

CORNET [eôr'nĕt]. [See MUSIC.]

COTTON [eŏt'ton], not in A.V., but thrice in R.V. margin: Gen. 41. 42; Esth. 1. 6; Isa. 19. 9.

COURT [eōurt]. [See TEMPLE.]

COVENANT [eŏv'ĕ-nănt]. The religion of Israel rested on a covenant between Jehovah and that people. God founded the covenant by His promise, and His people's part in it was the fulfilment of the divine command. Entrance into it was marked by the sign of circumcision. A New Covenant was promised by the prophets (Jer. 31. 31); and this is established in Christ (Mat. 26. 28; 1 Cor. 11. 25; Heb. 8. 7 ff.). [See BIBLE.]

COVENANT, Ark of the. [See TABERNACLE.]

COVENANT, Book of the, originally Ex. 20. 23, was applied to all the Mosaic books, hence to all the Scriptures, which are divided into those of the Old and New Covenants, or Testaments. [See PENTATEUCH, also BIBLE.]

COVERDALE'S [eŏv'er-dāle] BIBLE, 1535, a folio volume, printed probably at Zurich, is the first complete English Bible issued from the press. Coverdale was less scholarly than Tindale. But he achieved one remarkable literary feat. To this day, wherever the Psalms are read, according to the Prayer-book version, they are practically as Coverdale translated them for his 1535 Bible.

CREATION [erē-ā'tiŏn]. Cuneiform tablets have been discovered which give the different accounts of the creation current in Babylonia. One of them, in the form of a long poem, resembles in many respects the account in the first chapter of Genesis. It commences with the statement that "in the beginning" all was chaos of waters. Then the Upper and Lower Firmaments were created, and the gods came into existence. After that comes a long account of the struggle between Bel-Merodach and the "Dragon" of chaos, "the serpent of evil," with her allies, the forces of anarchy and darkness. It ended in the victory of the god of light, who thereupon created the present world by the power of his "word." While retaining a general similarity to the account of the creation recorded in Genesis, these Babylonian stories clearly reveal the degenerating influence of polytheism on the grand and simple narrative of Genesis 1.

CRETE [erēte], an island in the Mediterranean, 60 miles south of Greece. St. Paul touched at Crete on his voyage to Italy (Acts 27. 7, 8), and appears to have visited it at another time (Tit. 1. 5). The Cretans were proverbially untrustworthy; the testimony of the Cretan poet Epimenides (600 B.C.) is quoted in Titus 1. 12.

CRICKET [erĭck'ĕt]. [See BEETLE.]

CRIMSON [erĭm'son], Scarlet. The Israelites obtained this highly-prized dye from an insect (similar to the cochineal insect) found on the holm-oak.

CROSS [erŏss] (Mark 15. 21, etc.). The cross as a means of inflicting death in the most cruel and shameful way was used by the Phœnicians, from whom it passed to the Greeks and the Romans. It consisted of two beams of wood nailed one to the other in the form of X, or T, or +. The last, which is most familiar to us in art, was in all probability the shape of Christ's cross.

CUCUMBER [eū'cŭm-bĕr], long cultivated in Syria and Egypt (Num. 11. 5). The watcher of the fruit (against jackals) occupies a "lodge" (Isa. 1. 8) or "booth" (Job 27. 18).

CUMMIN [eŭm'mĭn] (Isa. 28. 25, 27; Mat. 23. 23), the aromatic fruit of an umbelliferous plant, used as a condiment.

CURSE [eûrse]. In the ancient warfare of the Israelites, as of the neighboring nations, the enemy and all his belongings were placed under a ban or curse (Deut. 2. 34; 3. 6; 7. 2, 25; 2 Kings 8. 12; 15. 16). Thus on the Moabite stone we read, "I destroyed all the people of the city to delight the eyes of Chemosh and Moab;" and cf. 2 Kings 19. 11 margin of R.V. It was such a ban, or sentence of extermination, that Achan (Josh. 7. 1) and Saul violated (Deut. 25. 17–19; 1 Sam. 15. 23), and through that violation he and all his were included under it. Ezra 10. 8 is an early instance of excommunication from the congregation (afterwards alluded to by our Lord, John 9. 22; 12. 42; 16. 2; Luke 6. 22). It was most probably administered by the elders of the congregation. It was either temporary or permanent. To this curse or permanent ban corresponds the anathema (q.v.) of the apostolic church. In Gal. 3. 10 St. Paul teaches that the breakers of the law are under a curse, and that "Christ redeemed us from the curse of the law, having become a curse for us," and refers to Deut. 21. 23.

CUSH [eŭsh] represents in the Old Testament (1) the Kassi of the Babylonian inscriptions, who lived in the mountains of Elam [see BABYLONIA]; (2) the Kas of the Egyptian monuments, Ethiopia, or the Soudan [see EGYPT].

CYMBALS [çym'bals]. [See MUSIC.]

CYPRESS [çy'prĕss] (Isa. 44. 14), a very hard evergreen tree, abundant in Palestine. The R.V. here gives holm-tree.

CYPRUS [eÿ'prŭs], a large island in the Levant, 60 miles from the coast of Syria; once a centre of commercial activity. It was the scene of St. Paul's earliest missionary labors (Acts 13. 4–13), along with Barnabas and John Mark, who afterwards visited it (Acts 15. 39). [See CHITTIM.]

CYRUS [çy'rus]. [See BABYLONIA and ISAIAH.]

DAMASCUS [da-măs'cus] (Gen. 15. 2, etc.), the ancient capital of Syria, a city of some 250,000 inhabitants. Being the centre of trade between Palestine and Chaldæa, it has always been important. The river Barada flows from fountains 23 miles from Damascus, and as it nears Damascus has seven canals drawn off from it, which supply water to all the fields and gardens of the city. Two of these are the ancient Abana and Pharpar. Damascus is noticed on monuments as early as 1600 B.C. It was conquered by Solomon, after whose death it became the capital of a Syrian dynasty. Its king, Rezin, was finally conquered by Tiglath-pileser of Assyria in 732 B.C. It was taken by Alexander the Great after the fall of Tyre. The Romans made it the capital of Syria, and the early Arab khalifs ruled here in the seventh and eighth centuries A.D. In the time of St. Paul (2 Cor. 11, 32), Aretas, the ruler of Damascus, was a Nabathæan, subject to Rome.

DAN [dăn] (Gen. 14. 14, etc.), the north limit of Palestine, near the sources of Jordan. Under Jeroboam it became an idolatrous centre, where a calf idol was worshipped.

DANIEL [dăn'i-el] (Heb. "judge of God," i.e. one who judges in God's name) is mentioned in Ezekiel in the sixth century B.C., along with Noah and Job, as an exemplar of wisdom and righteousness (Ezek. 14. 20, and 28. 3). The book which bears his name states that during the Babylonian Captivity he held a high place at the courts of Nebuchadrezzar, Darius, and Cyrus, in spite of all the plots of malignant rivals. It is written partly in Hebrew, partly in Aramaic, and is placed in our Bible, as in the LXX. and Vulgate, after Ezekiel; while in the Hebrew Canon it appears not among the prophets, but among the Hagiographa. The first half is narrative, the second consists of visions of the history of the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Grecian, and Roman empires, succeeded by the kingdom of "the people of the saints of the Most High."

CLAY TABLET. (From a Photograph.)
A loan by Belshazzar, dated 11th year of Nabonidus. Now in the British Museum.

Because of its many clear predictions, unbelieving critics have tried to discredit the Book of Daniel and to refer it to the second century B.C. However, attested as it is by our Lord Himself (Mat. 24. 15), its genuineness stands secure, and many of its details have been remarkably confirmed by the evidence of recently discovered monuments.

The apocryphal Additions to the Book of Daniel are all unworthy of that book, and their non-canonicity is obvious—

(a) The Song of the Three Children is interpolated into the account of the three young men in the fiery furnace (Dan. 3). It consists of a prayer made by Azarias in the midst of the fire, and a song sung by himself and his two companions.

(b) Bel and the Dragon relates how Daniel exposed the frauds of certain priests of Bel, and burst asunder a dragon by feeding him with lumps of pitch. [See APOCRYPHA.]

DARNELL [där'nĕl], R.V. margin, Mat. 13. 25, for "tares." [See TARES.]

DAVID [dā'vid] (Heb. "beloved"), the second and greatest king over Israel, was the youngest son of Jesse, and was born at Bethlehem, where his early youth was spent as a shepherd. While still a stripling he slew the Philistine giant Goliath, and was admitted to the court and service of King Saul, whose melancholy he soothed by his skilful playing on the harp. Saul's daughter Michal became his wife, and Saul's son Jonathan was united to him in a lifelong friendship. Fleeing from the deadly jealousy of Saul, he first escaped to the country of the Philistines. Then, gathering at the cave of Adullam a band of 400 (afterwards 600) men, he contrived to avoid Saul by moving hither and thither in the south country. For a year and four months he lived at Ziklag, as a vassal of the king of Gath. After the death of Saul and Jonathan at Gilboa, David reigned over Judah at Hebron for seven and a half years, and after the death of Saul's son Ishbosheth he became king over all Israel. He took the stronghold Jebus, on the hill of Zion (the "city of David"), from the Jebusites, and built a palace there, with a tent beside it, in which the ark of the covenant was placed (2 Sam. 6), until a temple should be built for it by his successor. In addition to his old guard of 600 gibborim (or "heroes"), now largely recruited from foreigners, especially "Cherethites and Pelethites" (most probably Cretans and Philistines), he had, according to Chronicles, 288,000 fighting men, of whom 24,000 were under arms each month in the year. A few years' successful war made David master of the whole territory from the Euphrates to the Egyptian frontier (2 Sam. 8). In the latter part of his reign of thirty-two years in Jerusalem, his favorite son Absalom rebelled against him and was slain, to his father's great sorrow; and shortly before his death (which has been variously dated 1015, 980, and 977 B.C.) another son, Adonijah, attempted by means of a revolt to frustrate the king's choice of Solomon as his successor.

David, while he was the hero of the people, refused to lift his hand against "the Lord's anointed," even in his own defence, contenting himself with an appeal to the Divine judgment. He is contrasted with Saul as "the man after God's own heart." Heroic confidence in God sustained him in all the difficulties of his life and of his reign. "He executed judgment and justice unto all his people," and established the monarchy on a sound civil and religious basis. The greatest stain upon his character was his foul wrong done to Uriah, followed by his indirect murder, sins of which he bitterly repented. The last song of "the sweet psalmist of Israel" expresses the spirit of his life and of his rule (2 Sam. 23. 1–7). In the darkest days of the nation's history men held to the ancient promises connected with David's Son and David's Lord. The memory of the "sure mercies of David" (2 Sam. 7. 12–16), and the "everlasting covenant" God made with him (2 Sam. 23. 5), quickened their Messianic hope of One who should be given "for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people" (Isa. 55. 3, 4; cf. Acts 13. 34).

DAY OF ATONEMENT [ă-tōne'ment]. [See ATONEMENT, DAY OF.]

DEACON [dēa'con] (Gr. "servant"), in the New Testament, the name of a class of congregational office-bearers, first mentioned about 63 A.D. (at Philippi, Phil. 1. 1). St. Paul gives their qualifications in 1 Tim. 3. 8–13. Their work seems to have chiefly been the visiting and relief of the poor.

Though Irenæus, about 150 A.D., calls Stephen "the first deacon," none of the seven named in Acts 6. 5 are called deacons in the New Testament. It is clear that their office and qualifications were next to those of the apostleship (Acts 6. 3; cf. 1 Tim. 3. 8–13), and that at least Stephen and Philip were specially active as preachers and evangelists (Acts 21. 8). The early church, regarding Acts 6. 1–6 as the record of the institution of the order of deacons, appointed seven in every church, and assigned to them the special care of the sick and of the poor.

DEACONESSES [dēa'con-ĕss-es], women specially charged with the care of the poor and the sick of their own sex (Rom. 16. 1, 3, 12; Phil. 4. 2, 3). Widows who devoted themselves to the church's service are spoken of as being "enrolled," and constituting a special class (1 Tim. 5. 9, 10; cf. Titus 2. 3-5), probably as assistants to the deacons.

DEAD SEA [dĕad sēa], the great salt lake in the south of Palestine, into which the Jordan flows; called in the Old Testament "the salt sea" (Gen.

DEAD SEA (at the north end).

14. 3), "the sea of the plain" (Deut. 3. 17), "the east sea" (Ezek. 47. 18), and "the sea" (Ezek. 47. 8); called by the Arabs "the sea of Lot," and by the Greeks "Asphaltites" or "sea of bitumen." It lies 16 miles east of Jerusalem, and is 53 miles long and about 10 broad. It has no outlet, its level being maintained by rapid evaporation. Its water contains twenty-six per cent. of salts, about eight times as much as that of the ocean. Its surface is 1,292 feet below that of the Mediterranean, and the depth of its greater part is 1,300 feet. There is a ridge of rock-salt ("the Ridge of Sodom") on the southern shore, 7 miles long and 300 feet high.

DEBORAH [dĕb'o-rah] ("bee"), a heroine of the tribe of Naphtali, who as a "mother in Israel" (Judg. 4. 4, 14; 5. 7) administered justice on Mount Ephraim, and was numbered among the judges. When the Canaanite king Jabin, and Sisera, the leader of his army, oppressed Israel, she summoned Barak from Kadesh to lead 10,000 men of the northern tribes to a victorious struggle with the enemy. Her glorious song of victory (Judg. 5) is one of the earliest extant productions of Hebrew poetry. It gives God the glory, and shows in a time of national disunion a living faith that the scattered tribes of Israel form one people of Jehovah.

DECAPOLIS [de-căp'o-lĭs] (Mat. 4. 25; Mark 5. 20; 7. 31), a region of "ten cities," allied to each other, in Bashan and Gilead, and including Beth-shean, in the Jordan valley.

DELUGE [dĕl'ūge], the overflowing of the earth with water in the time of Noah, for the punishment of sin (Gen. 6. 9). Traditions of such a flood are found among the Chinese, among the natives of North and South America, and most primitive races. The account of the deluge discovered in

ACCOUNT OF THE DELUGE.

(From the Library of Assur-bani-pal at Nineveh (668–626 B.C.). Now in British Museum.)

The "Creation Series" and the "Gisdubar or Gilgamish Series" give Babylonian and Assyrian accounts of the Creation, and the Babylonian account of the Flood, in many particulars resembling closely that given in the book of Genesis.

1872 in the remains of the library of Assur-banipal (668-626) strikingly resembles that of Genesis. That king had it copied from a cuneiform inscription derived from Erech (Warka), of a date not later than the seventeenth century B.C. Xisuthros, the Chaldæan Noah, was rescued along with his family, servants, and goods, on account of his righteousness. The deluge lasted seven days, and all life perished except that which was in the ark. Xisuthros sent forth in succession a dove, a swallow, and a raven. The ship or ark grounded on "the mountain of Nizir," to the northeast of Assyria. Xisuthros and his wife were then translated to the skies.

DEUTERONOMY [deū'tēr-ŏn'ō-mў] (Gr. "second law"), the name of the fifth of the Mosaic books. It concludes the Pentateuch, bringing the historic narrative down to the death of Moses. While containing both history and law, they are not mingled as in Exodus and Numbers. Its main content consists of addresses delivered by Moses.

DIAMOND [dī'a-mond] (Heb. gahalom, Gr. adamas). One form of crystallized carbon, usually colorless, remarkable for its brilliancy and exceptional hardness. This gem was known to the Romans at least as early as the first century of our era, but probably not to the Jews in Old Testament times. It cannot have been used for the high priest's breastplate, because the art of engraving upon, or even of cutting, the stone was a discovery of much later date. Some think the gahalom may have been a sapphire (q.v.), but in this case also the great hardness would be a difficulty; others, a sardonyx (q...).

DILL [dĭll]. [See ANISE.]

DISPERSION [dĭs-pēr'siŏn] (Gr. diaspora), a technical term for the Jews living outside of Palestine (John 7. 35); afterwards also for Christians living among the Gentiles (James 1. 1; 1 Pet. 1. 1).

DIVORCE [dĭ-vōrçe']. The Mosaic law regulating divorce is found in Deut. 24. 1-4, where it is enacted that the husband must give a dismissed wife a "bill of divorcement," a document releasing her from all claims on his part, and setting her free to marry again. The cases in which the right of a husband to divorce his wife was lost are stated ch. 22. 19, 29. We find no instance of a divorce in the books of the Old Testament written after Moses, though it is certain that in the time of Christ the Hebrews separated from their wives on very slight and trivial pretenses.

Our Lord teaches that marriage rests on the original creative ordinance of God, making the bond between man and wife indissoluble, and that the Mosaic legislation with regard to divorce was a concession to natural hardness of heart (Mat. 10. 4-9; 5. 31 ff.). Divorce is only permissible in the case of unfaithfulness (Mat. 5. 32; 19. 9) and of malicious desertion (1 Cor. 7. 15).

DOG [dŏg], mentioned about forty times in Scripture, almost always in a tone of contempt. The Jews, not being a hunting people, did not train the dog, except to guard their flocks (Job 30. 1). They had not the noble mastiffs and wolfhounds which we find carved on Assyrian monuments, nor the varied breeds of hunting dogs portrayed on the Egyptian walls. Their dogs were, doubtless, as they are still in Palestine, pariah or ownerless dogs, of a type not unlike the Scottish collie. Their nocturnal habits are referred to in Ps. 59. 14, 15. In the East they are the scavengers of the towns. The term "dog" is still hurled in reproach by the Jew at the Gentile, and by the Moslem at the Christian.

DOUAY BIBLE [dōō'ăy bī'ble]. [See under RHEIMS TESTAMENT.]

DRAGON [drăg'ŏn], a huge, powerful creature of indefinite shape. In Ezek. 29. 3, the "great dragon" is the crocodile.

DRESS [drĕss] among the Jews consisted mainly of an inner garment, called a coat (q.v.) or tunic, and an outer, called a cloke (q.v.) or mantle. The fullest list of women's dress is in Isa. 3. 18-24. [See also HEADDRESS, ORNAMENTS, and SANDAL.]

DROMEDARY [drom'ĕ-dâ-rў] (Isa. 60. 6 and Jer. 2. 23), a finer and swifter race of camel, differing from the ordinary camel as a race-horse does from a cart-horse. According to an Arabic proverb, "Men are like camels—not one in a hundred is a dromedary."

EBIONITES [ē bī-ŏ-nītes]. [See JUDAIZERS.]

EBONY [ĕb'on-ў] (Ezek. 27.15), black heart-wood of various trees.

ECCLESIASTES [ec-clē'si-ăs'tēs]. The title of the book in Hebrew is Kohe'leth, which the Greek translator rendered Ecclesiastes, one who speaks in the ecclesia or assembly. It is composed of two elements, the author's theoretical and practical philosophy. The theoretical philosophy is briefly: All is vanity—there is no gain or result in human life; it is without result, like the whole order of things, which goes on in an eternal round, accomplishing nothing. All the events of human life are in the hand of God; man has no power over them more than he has over the wind (8. 8). The practical philosophy follows from this: Nothing is left to man but to rejoice in his works, for that is his portion. Even over this man has no power; it also is in the determination of God (7, 13, 14). Power to enjoy what good there is in life is the gift of God (2, 24, 25; 3. 13; 5. 19). The Preacher is, of course, no sensualist. The "good," enjoyment of which he recommends, consists of the simple pleasures of life—eating and drinking, the pleasure to be derived from activity in work or business (9. 7-10; 11. 1-6, 9, 10). He is a God-fearing man, and ends as he begins, with inculcating "the fear of God" (3. 14; 5. 7; 12. 13).

The writer first records his experience of the vanity of worldly enjoyments. Chapters 3 and 4 treat of the conflict between the will of God and man. Chapters 5-10 mingle reflections on the vanity of riches as compared with the value of wisdom. The book concludes with exhortations to industry, charity, and godliness.

The book, ascribed by tradition to Solomon, does not expressly mention his name. Luther thought that the aim of the whole poem was expressed in 8, 15, and many scholars are of his opinion, that it belongs to the latest of the Scriptures of the Old Testament.

ECCLESIASTICUS [ec-clē'si-ăs'ti-cŭs], or the Wisdom of Jesus, the Son of Sirach, is a companion to the Wisdom of Solomon (q.v.), but is inferior to it in literary and spiritual worth. A number of its sayings have become proverbial—e.g. ch. 2. 1 has been rendered familiar by its use in the Imitatio Christi, "My son, if thou come to serve the Lord, prepare thyself for temptation."

The work was originally written in Hebrew, and was paraphrased into Greek in Alexandria in 132 B.C. Towards the close, the writer makes a rapid sketch of the heroes of Judaism, beginning with Enoch and ending with Simon the high priest. [See APOCRYPHA.]

EDEN [ē'den], Garden of. Owing to the changes which the face of the earth suffered in the Flood, it is now difficult to establish the exact location of Eden. Some scholars identify Eden with Armenia, where the Tigris and Euphrates have their origin. The Araxes and the Choruk would then represent the Gihon and Pishon, and the land of Havilah would be identified with Colchis, famous for its golden sands. The tree of life is often represented in Assyrian sculptures between two winged guardian spirits, who have sometimes the heads of eagles, sometimes of men, and sometimes stand, sometimes kneel.

EDOM [ē'dom], the Land of (Gen. 36. 16), or Idumæa (Isa. 34. 5, 6), a mountainous land between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Akabah, and extending into Arabia Petræa. Its chief city was Sela or Petra. The Edomites were Semites, closely related to the Israelites. They were frequently at war with the Israelites. They were conquered by David (2 Sam. 8. 14), and by Amaziah (2 Chr. 25. 11, 12). They at last fell under the power of the Assyrians, and disappeared as a nation.

EGYPT [ē'ǧypt], the name applied since the time of Homer to the land of the Nile, in the northeast of Africa. Egypt consists geographically of two halves—the northern being the Delta, and the southern Upper Egypt, between Cairo and the First Cataract. The Hebrews called it Mizraim, the "land of Ham," and Rahab. The later Egyptians were of a white race and their original home is still a matter of dispute. The ancient Egyptian language, of which the latest form is Coptic, is distantly connected with the Semitic family of speech.

The civilization of Egypt goes back to a remote antiquity. The two kingdoms of the north and south were united by Menes, founder of the first historical dynasty of kings. The first six dynasties, lasting 1,478 years, constitute what is known as the Old Empire, which had its capital at Memphis, south of Cairo (the Old Testament Moph or Noph). The native name was Mennofer, "the good place." The Pyramids were tombs of the monarchs of the Old Empire—those of Gizeh being erected in the time of the Fourth Dynasty.

After the fall of the Old Empire came a period of decline and obscurity, followed by the Middle Empire, the most powerful dynasty of which was the Twelfth. The Fayyûm was rescued for agriculture by the kings of the Twelfth Dynasty, and two obelisks were erected in front of the temple of the Sun-god at On or Heliopolis (near Cairo), one of which is still standing. The capital of the Middle Empire was Thebes, in Upper Egypt.

The Middle Empire was overthrown by the Hyksos (haq'schas, "Bedawin chieftains") or Shepherd princes from Asia, whose three dynasties ruled over Northern Egypt for several centuries. They had their capital at Zoan or Tanis (now Sân), in the northeastern part of the Delta. In their time Abraham, Jacob, and Joseph entered Egypt. The Hyksos were finally expelled about 1600 B.C. by the hereditary princes of Thebes, who founded the Eighteenth Dynasty, and carried the war into Asia. Canaan, Syria, and Cyprus were subdued, and the boundaries of the Egyptian Empire were fixed at the Euphrates. The Soudan, which had been conquered by the kings of the Twelfth Dynasty, was again annexed to Egypt, and the eldest son of the Pharaoh took the title of "prince of Cush" (q.v.).

One of the later kings of the dynasty, Amenôphis IV., taking the name Khu-n-Aten ("spirit of the sun"), endeavored to supplant the ancient state religion of Egypt by a pantheistic monotheism derived from Asia, the one supreme god being adored under the image of the solar disk. The attempt led to religious and civil war, and the Pharaoh retreated from Thebes to Central Egypt, where he built a new capital, on the site of the present Tel el-Amarna (q.v.). The cuneiform tablets that were found here in 1887 represent his foreign correspondence (about 1400 B.C.). He surrounded himself with officials and courtiers of Asiatic, and more especially Canaanitish, extraction; but the native party succeeded eventually in overthrowing the government; the capital of Khu-n-Aten was destroyed, and the foreigners were driven out of the country—those that remained being reduced to serfdom.

The national triumph was marked by the rise of the Nineteenth Dynasty. Its founder, Ramses I, has been identified with the "new king, who knew not Joseph." His grandson, Ramses II., reigned sixty-seven years (1348-1281 B.C.), and was an indefatigable builder. If Pithom, excavated by Dr. Naville in 1883, was one of the cities he built, he must have been the Pharaoh of the Oppression. The Pharaoh of the Exodus may have been one of his immediate successors, whose reigns were short. It is to be remarked, however, that these identifications, while held by many scholars, are by no means certain. Other scholars connect the exodus with the Eighteenth Dynasty.

The Nineteenth Dynasty soon afterwards came to an end, Egypt was distracted by civil war, and for a short time a Canaanite, Arisu, ruled over it.

Then came the Twentieth Dynasty, the second Pharaoh of which, Ramses III., restored the power of his country. In one of his campaigns he overran the southern part of Palestine, where the Israelites had not yet settled. But it was during the reign of Ramses III. that Egypt finally lost Gaza and the adjoining cities to the Philistines.

After Ramses III., Egypt fell into decay. Solomon married the daughter of one of the last kings of the Twenty-first Dynasty, which was overthrown by Shishak I., the general of the Libyan mercenaries, who founded the Twenty-second Dynasty (1 Kings 11. 40; 14. 25, 26). A list of the places he captured in Palestine is engraved on the outside of the south wall of the temple of Karnak.

In the age of Hezekiah, Egypt was conquered by Ethiopians from the Soudan, who constituted the Twenty-fifth Dynasty. The third of them was Tirhakah (2 Kings 19. 9). In 674 B.C. it was conquered by the Assyrians, who divided it into twenty satrapies, and Tirhakah was driven back to his ancestral dominions. Fourteen years later it successfully revolted under Psammetichus I. of Sais, the founder of the Twenty-sixth Dynasty. Among his successors were Necho (2 Kings 23. 29) and Hophra, or Apries (Jer. 37. 5, 7, 11). The dynasty came to an end in 525 B.C. when the country was subjugated by Cambyses. Soon afterwards it became a Persian satrapy.

The title of Pharaoh, given to the Egyptian king, is the Egyptian Peraa, or "Great House," which may be compared with that of "Sublime Porte." It is found in very early Egyptian texts.

Egyptian religion was a strange mixture of

A Slab of Black Basalt, found by the French in 1798 at Rosetta, and deposited in the British Museum in 1802. (198–195 B.C.)

The inscription, in honor of Ptolemy V., Epiphanes, king of Egypt, is in Greek and Egyptian, the latter in hieroglyphics or writing of the priests, and in demotic or writing of the people. The inscription furnished the key to the decipherment of Egyptian hieroglyphics and the interpretation of the ancient Egyptian language. [See page 36.]

pantheism and animal-worship, the gods being adored in the form of animals. While the educated classes resolved their manifold deities into manifestations of one omnipresent and omnipotent divine power, the lower classes regarded the animals as incarnations of the gods. Under the Old Empire, Ptah, the Creator, the god of Memphis, was at the head of the Pantheon; afterwards Amon, the god of Thebes, took his place. Amon, like most of the other gods, was identified with Ra, the Sun-god of Heliopolis.

The Egyptians believed in a resurrection and a future state of rewards and punishments. The judge of the dead was Osiris, who had been slain by Set, the representative of evil, and afterwards restored to life. His death was avenged by his son Horus, whom the Egyptians invoked as their "Redeemer." Osiris and Horus, along with Isis, while worshipped as separate divinities, represented the Sun-god under different forms.

The Pyramids, the mined temples, and the obelisks of Egypt have been described in all ages, but it was not until early in the present century, through the finding of the Rosetta stone (see page 35), that the key to reading the hieroglyphic texts was discovered by the French scholar Champollion. The work of Brugsch and Birch then led to the recovery of history contained on the monuments or in papyri. The excavations of Mariette followed; and those of Dr. Flinders Petrie and Mr. De Morgan are still increasing our information as to the religion, social customs, and history of Egypt. In 1896, among the ruins of the temple of Meneptah at Thebes, Dr. Petrie found a large granite stele, on which is engraved a hymn of victory commemorating the defeat of Libyan invaders who had overrun the Delta. At the end other victories of Meneptah are glanced at, and it is said that "the Israelites (I-s-y-r-a-e-l-u) are desolated; their crops destroyed. This is the most ancient reference to "Israelites" outside the Bible.

ELAMITES [ē'lam-īte*s*], the inhabitants of Elam, or "the Highlands," east of Babylonia (q.v.), a short-headed race like the pre-Semitic Sumerians of Babylonia. Shushan or Susa was its capital. Babylonia was frequently invaded by the Elamite kings. Finally the Assyrians, under Assur-bani-pal (about 650 B.C.), succeeded in conquering the country.

ELDERS [ĕl'dĕr*s*], or heads of families and tribes, among the early Hebrews (Deut. 22. 15), as among other primitive peoples, administered justice within their own circles in time of peace, and were the leaders in time of war (cf. the Arabian sheikh, "elder;" and see Ex. 3. 16; 19. 7; 24. 1; Gen. 50. 7; Num. 22. 7). The "elders of the city" (Deut. 19. 12; 21. 3, etc.) afterwards took the place of the elders of tribes and families, retaining their judicial functions (Deut. 22. 18). The "judges" and "officers" of Deut. 16. 18 (cf. 21. 2) were probably those among the elders who acted respectively as administrators and executors of justice. When the synagogue became an established institution, the elders who were the civil authorities of a place were also the elders of its Synagogue.

The elders or presbyters (Gr. "elders") of Christian churches were local overseers chosen after the model of the synagogue. They appear from the first to have been elected by the people, and, on their being approved by the apostles, to have been instituted to their office by prayer and the laying on of hands. Their duties were to exercise spiritual oversight over the people as pastors, visiting the sick (Jas. 5. 14), and caring for the poor and for strangers (1 Tim. 3. 2; Tit. 1. 8), to maintain order in the religious assemblies, to teach (1 Thes. 5. 12; 1 Tim. 3. 2; 5. 17; Tit. 1. 9), and to administer the affairs of the congregation, in concurrence with the deacons (Acts 20. 28; 1 Tim. 5. 17; Tit. 1. 7; 1 Pet. 5. 1-3). The word elder or presbyter was interchangeable with the word bishop in New Testament times, and the offices were one and the same till about 150 A.D., when the presbyters first became subordinate to the bishops. [See BISHOP.]

ELEPHANT [ĕl'ĕ-phant], not mentioned in Scripture; but in 1 Kings 10. 22, 2 Chr. 9. 21 we find "elephants' teeth" for the ivory which Solomon imported.

ELI [ē'lī], a judge in Israel, held that office and the high-priesthood for forty years at Shiloh (1 Sam. 1-4). His sons, Hophni and Phinehas, through gross misconduct, disgraced their priestly descent and position; and a great defeat near Mizpah, in which they and 10,000 Israelites were slain by the Philistines, was evidence of the divine displeasure. Eli died of horror at the news, and was succeeded by Samuel (1 Sam. 4. 12 ff.).

ELIJAH [ĕ-lī'jah] ("Jehovah is God," New Testament form in A.V. "Elias"), "the Tishbite, was of the inhabitants (R.V. sojourners) of Gilead" (1 Kings 17. 1; according to the LXX., "of Tishbeh of Gilead," R.V. margin). His history is given in 1 Kings 17-19. and 21, and 2 Kings 1 and 2; and in the Old Testament he is elsewhere mentioned only in 2 Chr. 21. 12 and Mal. 4. 5. His prophetic ministry belongs to the northern kingdom, in the reigns of Ahab and Ahaziah. When Ahab, under the influence of his Tyrian wife Jezebel, threatened to suppress the worship of Jehovah, and made Baal-worship the court religion, Elijah suddenly appeared before the king to announce a long drought, in punishment of the apostasy of the covenant nation (1 Kings 17. 1; cf. Luke 4. 25; Jas. 5. 17). While this lasted (three years) he was at first miraculously fed by ravens at the brook Cherith (1 Kings 17. 5; 19. 5), and afterwards lived at Zarephath, a Tyrian city, in the house of a widow, whose son he restored to life (17. 21). Elijah now appears before Ahab, and challenges the prophets of Baal to a contest between Baal and Jehovah, in which it shall be shown by fire from heaven which is the true God. The fire consumes the sacrifice and altar of Jehovah; the people acknowledge that Jehovah is God, and fall upon the priests of Baal, to the number of 400, and slay them; and before evening there is a tempest of rain. But this victory is soon followed by defeat; and despairing of man, Elijah journeys to Horeb to meet God. There a vision passes before him (19. 11–18), and reveals to him that God establishes His kingdom not by the violence of earthquake and tempest, but in gentleness and stillness. He returns with new faith to carry out God's commands, on his way to Damascus anointing Elisha to be his successor (19. 19). Elijah again met Ahab to announce the ruin of his house for his heartless robbery of Naboth, whose death had been compassed by Jezebel (1 Kings 21). Wonderful as Elijah's whole career was, its completion (2 Kings 2), in which the Enoch miracle (Gen. 5. 24) was repeated, was its most remarkable event. There appeared "chariots of fire and horses of fire," and Elijah was "taken up to heaven in a whirlwind." Elijah was the leader of the reaction of spiritual religion of Jehovah against the nature religion of Baal, and through his efforts Baal-worship was effectually checked in Israel. The eulogy of Ecclesiasticus (48. 1–12) shows in what high esteem the later Jews held his memory. No other prophet is so often mentioned in the New Testament. The last prophet, Malachi, prophesies his return before the day of the Lord (4. 5). This prophecy was literally interpreted in Israel (cf. Mat. 16. 14; 17. 10; 27. 47, 49; Mark 6. 15; John 1. 21, 25). The evangelists and our Lord show that it was fulfilled in John the Baptist (Mat. 11. 14; 17. 10 ff.; Luke 1. 17). In the transfiguration of our Lord Elijah appears as the representative of the prophets, beside Moses, the representative of the law (Mat. 17. 3).

ELISHA [e-lī'shà] ("God is salvation"), the son of Shaphat, of Abel-Meholah, was the disciple and successor of Elijah (q.v.), to whom he is related much as Joshua is to Moses. His prophetic work, which belonged to the reigns of Jehoram, Jehu, and Jehoahaz, is described in 2 Kings, ch. 2–9 and 13. As the spiritual guide of the people, he showed the same spirit of opposition to the idolatrous court and priesthood which had inspired Elijah, and was to the faithful servants of Jehovah what his great teacher had been before him, "the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof"—i.e. Israel's strength and protection (2 Kings 2. 12; 13. 14). Many miracles are recorded as having been wrought by him. He died early in the reign of Joash, at an extreme old age.

ELM [ĕlm]. An erroneous translation of elah (Hos. 4. 13), elsewhere rendered "oak" and "teil tree" (q.v.). The elm is not found in Palestine.

EMBALMING [ĕm-bälm'ing], a mode of preserving a dead body from decay by the use of aromatic spices. The art was practised by the Egyptians from the very earliest times, and was by them brought to great perfection. It probably originated in the belief in the future reunion of the soul and the body. It was only rarely practised by the Jews (Gen. 50. 2; 2 Chr. 16. 14; cf. John 19. 39). An embalmed body is a mummy.

EMMAUS [em-mā'us] (Luke 24. 13) was a town about sixty furlongs from Jerusalem.

ENGLISH BIBLE [ĭn'glĭsh bī'ble]. As early as the eighth century the Psalter, the Gospels, and other portions of Scripture were translated into Anglo-Saxon; but these early versions exerted no influence that can be clearly traced upon the present English Bible. Successive stages in the development of which it is the result were: (1) Wycliffe's Version, 1380; (2) Tindale's Translations, 1525; (3) Coverdale's Bible, 1535; (4) Matthew's Bible, 1537; (5) the Great Bible, 1539–41; (6) the Geneva Bible, 1560; (7) the Bishops' Bible, 1568; (8) the Rheims-Douay Bible, 1582–1610; (9) the Authorized Version, 1611; (10) the Revised Version, 1881–1885; the American edition of the latter, 1901. See separate articles on all these.

EN-ROGEL [ĕn'rō'gel]. [See JERUSALEM.]

EPHESIANS [e-phē'sĭanş], the Epistle to the. St. Paul had resided in Ephesus for more than two years (Acts 19. 8, 10), yet the epistle contains no salutations, no references to his experiences in Ephesus. Its teaching is positive and general, yet intensely practical, ever emphasizing the divine plan of redemption. The epistle was probably a circular letter for the churches of the provinces of Asia, that which the Colossians were instructed (Col. 4. 16) to receive "from Laodicea." That the Epistle to the Ephesians was written immediately after that to the Colossians (q.v.) appears from Col. 4. 7, compared with Eph. 6. 21. Tychicus was the bearer of both. The similarities of thought in the two epistles are also marked and obvious. The reconcilement of all things in Christ in fulfilment of God's eternal purpose is common to the two (Eph. 1. 10; Col. 1. 19, 20); so too is the conception of Christ as the Head of the church (Eph. 4. 15; Col. 2. 19); the practical exhortations, although more compressed in the Epistle to the Colossians, yet follow the same order, and embrace similar topics.

EPHESUS [ĕph'e-sŭs], a famous city of Lydia, in Asia Minor, and the capital of Proconsular Asia, is noted for its Temple of Artemis or Diana (Acts 19. 27) and its great theatre. It was visited by St. Paul in his second journey (Acts 18. 19), when he left Aquila and Priscilla there to carry on the work; and in his third journey, when Demetrius raised an uproar against him (Acts 19. 1, 22–41).

EPHOD [ĕph'ŏd]. [See under PRIESTS.]

EPHRAIM [ē'phra-ĭm] ("fruitful"). The most powerful of the tribes of Northern Israel, extended from Benjamin to Manasseh west of Jordan.

EPHRATAH [ĕph'ra-tah]. [See BETHLEHEM.]

EPISTLES [ē-pĭs'tles], the apostolic letters, of which the New Testament gives a collection numbering twenty-one. These include: (1) the thirteen Epistles of St. Paul, addressed to particular churches or persons, of which the Epistles to Timothy and Titus are called the Pastoral Epistles; (2) the Epistle to the Hebrews; and (3) the Catholic or General Epistles, of which three are by St. John, two by St. Peter, one by St. James, one by St. Jude. See the separate articles on each.

ESAR-HADDON [ē'sar-hăd'don]. [See ASSYRIA.]

ESDRAELON [ĕs'dra-ē'lon], or Jezreel [jĕz're-el], the great plain stretching across Central Palestine from Gilboa to Mount Carmel and the hills of Galilee, and drained by the river Kishon. It was "the battlefield of Palestine" (Judg. 7. 1-25; 2 Chr. 35. 20-27).

ESDRAS [ĕs′dras], First and Second Books of. In the Vulgate these books appear as 3 and 4 Esdras, because Ezra and Nehemiah have been counted as two books of Ezra. Counting them in this way, the third Book of Esdras is a new version of the events relating to the return from the Captivity, the chief incident being a contest before the king by the young wits of the court. Zerubbabel wins with the well-known maxim, "Magna est veritas, et praevalebit"—i.e. "Truth is great, and will prevail." In consequence, he obtains concessions for the Jewish captives.

The fourth Book of Esdras has perished in the Greek, but is extant in versions. Its major part is a series of revelations to Ezra regarding the fortunes of Israel and of Jerusalem. Its date is probably after 70 A.D. [See APOCRYPHA.]

ESSENES [ĕs-sēnes′], an ascetic order, known to have existed from about 150 B.C. In the time of our Lord numbering about 4,000, they were settled in monastic communities near the Dead Sea, and in villages throughout the country. The name is probably from the root of a Hebrew word meaning "pious." The Essenes endeavored to reach absolute religious purity through strict abstemiousness and cleanliness. Their common meals were regarded as sacrificial feasts. Their lives were divided between religious exercises, lustrations, and labor at tillage and handicrafts. They had community of goods, and disapproved of marriage. They forbade trading, swearing of oaths, and anointing with oil. They sent gifts of incense to the Temple at Jerusalem, but differed from orthodox Judaism in rejecting all animal sacrifices, in praying towards the rising sun, which they looked upon as the manifestation of "the brightness of God," and in regarding the body as essentially evil and incapable of resurrection. The principles in which they differed from Judaism may have been derived from the farther East, perhaps from Parsism. They are not mentioned in the New Testament, and by the time of our Lord appear to have had little or no influence on the life of their nation.

ESTHER [ĕs′tẽr], the Book of. Esther ("star"), the Persian name of Hadassa ("myrtle"), a Jewess, the niece of the Benjamite Jew Mordecai, who for her beauty became the queen of the Persian king Ahasuerus (Xerxes, 480-465 B.C.). She succeeded in frustrating a plot contrived by the king's minister, Haman, for a massacre of the Jews. Haman was hanged, Mordecai was appointed in his stead, and the Jews slew in self-defense 75,000 Persians. The book which contains this narrative was written to explain the origin of the feast of Purim ("lots"), which is referred to in 2 Maccabees 15. 36 ff. as the "day of Mordecai."

Apocryphal, Additions to Esther.—These were inserted in the canonical text of Esther, partly with the view of improving the story, and partly to bring out the connection between the Book of Esther and the Feast of Purim (or "lots"), at which it was usually read. The interpolator appears to betray his date by allusion to the year 177 B.C. [See APOCRYPHA.]

ETHIOPIA [ē′thi-ō′pi-ȧ]. [See CUSH.]

EUPHRATES [eū-phrā-tēs], a great river of Asia, in the Bible called "the river" (Ex. 23. 31), and "the great river" (Deut. 1. 7), which flows from the mountains of Armenia to the Persian Gulf, 1,700 miles; 140 miles above the Gulf it is joined by the Tigris. The region between the rivers is thence called Mesopotamia.

EXILE [ĕx′ĭle]. [BABYLONIAN CAPTIVITY.]

EXODUS [ĕx′ō-dŭs], and Crossing of the Red Sea. The Pharaoh of the oppression is commonly identified with Ramses II and the Pharaoh of the exodus with Meneptah, his son and successor. However, aside from other chronological difficulties, the Hebrews are referred to in Egyptian inscriptions as already living in Canaan during Meneptah's reign [see Egypt]. According to revised Egyptian chronology, Thothmes III was the Pharaoh of the oppression and Amenophis IV the Pharaoh whose chariots perished in the Red Sea, which was the starting-point of the history of the Israelites as a nation. Recent researches have made the narrative more intelligible. The Red Sea, north of Suez, comprised not only the Bitter Lakes of the present day, but also Lake Timsah. Pithom and the surrounding district of Succoth were then near the sea, which at this part must have been very shallow. The Israelites were settled in Goshen, originally a tract of pasture-land corresponding to the district between the modern places Belbeis, Zagazig, and Tel el-Kebir. Their tyrannical ruler compelled them to build for him the store-cities or fortresses—Ramses (probably) near Abud Hama, and Pithom (now Tel el-Maskhuteh, twelve miles west of Ismailia).

When the Israelites were allowed to depart, they journeyed from Ramses to Succoth, about sixteen miles, and thence to the wilderness of Etham, and encamped at the then northern end of the Red Sea. At the edge of the wilderness the Hebrews received the order to march towards the south, so as to put the sea between them and the desert. Pharaoh concluded that "the wilderness shut them in," and that they were "entangled in the country," which they could not leave (Ex. 14. 1–3). They were told to encamp before Pi-hahiroth, between Migdol and the sea, over against Baal-zephon. There, at God's command, the strong wind, driving away the water, caused the sea to open, and kept its bed dry as long as the people went through. In the morning, when Israel had passed to the other side, the water, returning to its level, swept off everything which was in its way.

According to Naville, the place which agrees best with the narrative is between Lake Timsah and the so-called Bitter Lakes. There the sea would be narrow and of small depth; there also the effect of the wind on shallow water would be most strongly felt. Dawson thinks it was at the south part of the Bitter Lake, between station Fayid on the railway and station Geneffeh. Ebers and Trumbull believe the crossing of the Red Sea must have been from a point near the northwest shore of the Gulf of Suez. [See Pentateuch.]

Exorcists [ĕx'ŏr-çists], persons who professed to expel evil spirits by adjuration or the performance of certain rites. Strolling exorcists were very numerous in the first century, especially in Asia Minor. Some of them undertook, instead of their usual formulas, to employ the name of Jesus (Acts 19. 13).

Ezekiel [e-zē'ki-el] ("God strengthens"), a Jewish prophet, son of a priest Buzi, was among the captives whom Nebuchadrezzar carried with king Jehoiachin in 597 B.C. to Babylonia, where he was settled near the river Chebar. His prophetic work extended over not less than twenty-two years (592–570). His book consists of two principal parts: first, discourses and poems (1–39); second, the apocalypse (40–48). The first part consists of three groups of prophecies: first, prophecies concerning Judah and Israel, up to the time of the destruction of the Temple (1-24); second, minatory prophecies concerning the nations (25-32); third, prophecies concerning Israel and other nations as related to Israel, after the destruction of the Temple (33-39). The prophecies of this third group, like the apocalypse that follows, are much concerned with the thought of the New Covenant. The book is rich in striking lessons touching conduct and spiritual experiences. It is here that we find the vision of the valley of dry bones, the conception of God as the Good Shepherd, the sprinkling with clean water, the new heart in place of a stony heart, the showers of blessing, and many like matters that are household words with all believers.

EZRA [ĕz'ra] ("help"), a Jewish "priest and scribe" (Ezra 7. 11; Neh. 12. 26), the organizer of the post-Exilic community. With the favor and support of Artaxerxes Longimanus, he led a band of 1,800 male Israelites from Persia to Palestine in 458 B.C. to strengthen Zerubbabel's colony. He carried out a drastic reform by casting out the foreign wives and their children, and in Neh. 8 appears at the Feast of Tabernacles as the chief scribe of the Law of Moses, the leader of the priests and the Levites who read and explained the law to the people. Ezra exercised a most powerful influence on the development of Judaism. The purpose of his book is to give an account of the re-establishment of the Israelitish people and of their separation from foreign customs and idolatry. It is a continuation of Chronicles, the last sentence of 2 Chr. breaking off at a sentence which is found completed in the opening of the Book of Ezra. It narrates the restoration of Jerusalem and the Temple, and then describes the work of Ezra. Certain portions of it are written in the Aramaic dialect.

F

FALLOW DEER [făl'lō̆w dēer] ("Roebuck," R.V.; Deut. 14. 5 and 1 Kings 4. 23) were among the provisions for Solomon's table—probably the bubale or "wild cow" of the Arabs.

FASTING [făst'ing], complete or partial abstinence from food, is in the Old Testament an expression of religious humiliation, often described by the phrase, "to afflict the soul" (Lev. 16. 29, 31; Ps. 35. 13; Isa. 58. 3, 5, 10, etc.). It was regarded as the natural sign of sorrow (1 Sam. 1. 7; 20. 34; 2 Sam. 1. 12; Ps. 69. 11), especially of penitence (Joel 1. 14; 2. 12 ff.); and where this mood, which gives fasting its value, is wanting, the prophets condemn it as displeasing to God (Isa. 58. 3-5; Jer. 14. 12). The only regularly recurring fast prescribed by the law is "from even till even" on the great Day of Atonement (Lev. 16. 29; 23. 27-32; Acts 27. 9). After the Exile the days of national calamity were commemorated with fasting — the tenth day of the tenth month (Tebeth), the day of the beginning of the siege by Nebuchadrezzar (2 Kings 25. 1); the ninth day of the fourth month (Tammuz), when the city was taken (Jer. 52. 6 ff.); the seventh day of the fifth month (Ab), when the Temple was destroyed (2 Kings 25. 8); and in the seventh month (Tisri), the day of Gedaliah's murder (Jer. 41. 1 ff.; cf. Zech. 8. 19). Fasting came to be regarded as meritorious in itself (Judith 8. 6; Tobit 12. 8). The Pharisees fasted twice a week (Luke 18. 12) —on the fifth day of the week, when Moses was believed to have gone up to Mount Sinai; and on the second, when he was supposed to have descended. John's disciples fasted oft (Mat. 9. 14). Our Lord imposed no fasting on His disciples while He was with them (Mat. 9. 15); but did not condemn the practice when followed in a right spirit (Mat. 6. 16-18; 17. 21), and Himself fasted before the beginning of His ministry (Mat. 4. 2). The first Christians fasted; in particular before the mission of apostles and the appointment of elders (Acts 13. 2, 3; 14. 23). St. Paul's fastings recorded in 2 Cor. 6. 5 and 11. 27 appear to have been involuntary.

FATHER [fä'thĕr], a title of the First Person in the Godhead. God was revealed and known as the Father of His chosen people under the Old Testament dispensation (Deut. 32. 6; Jer. 31. 9), but it was peculiarly the function of Christ to reveal the Fatherhood of God and to bring men back to this relationship (John 1. 12), as it is the function of the Spirit to seal and testify to this relationship of God and the believer (Rom. 8. 15). In their relation to the Father in the kingdom of His Son (Col. 1. 13) believers are "sons of God" in a sense true of no others. It is a relation, not of nature, but of grace.

FEASTS [fēasts]. The three annual festivals of the Sanctuary were: (1) the Passover, (2) the Feast of Weeks, (3) the Feast of Tabernacles.

1. The PASSOVER was a commemoration of the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt. It began on the fourteenth of Abib or Nisan in the evening — i.e. in the beginning of the fifteenth day — with a sacrificial meal, when a lamb or kid was roasted whole, and was eaten with bitter herbs and unleavened bread by the members of every family, and the head of the household recited the history of the redemption from Egypt. The sacrifices denoted expiation and dedication; the bitter herbs recalled the bitterness of the Egyptian bondage; unleavened bread was an emblem of purity (cf. Lev. 2. 11).

2. The FEAST OF WEEKS or of Harvest, or Day of Firstfruits, or Pentecost (Gr. "fiftieth"), held on the fiftieth day or seven weeks after the second day of the Passover, was the second of the three annual festivals of the Sanctuary. It was limited to a single day, for only a portion of the products of the year had been garnered. Two loaves of leavened bread, representing the firstfruits of the grain harvest, were offered to the Lord. Ten suitable animals were sacrificed as a burnt-offering, a kid for a sin-offering, and two lambs for a peace-offering.

The FEAST OF TABERNACLES, or Ingathering, was the last of the three annual festivals. It was appointed to take place in the seventh month, at the close of the agricultural season, when all the products of the year had been gathered. It was celebrated during seven days: the daily burnt-offering included a total of seventy bullocks, distributed by a decreasing scale over the seven days, and in addition two rams and fourteen lambs daily; and as a sin-offering a he-goat was daily sacrificed (Num. 29. 12-34). During its celebration the people dwelt in booths made of the boughs of trees.

FERRET [fĕr'rĕt] (A.V.; "Gecko," R.V.), one of five species of lizards mentioned in Lev. 11. 30. [See LIZARD.]

FIG [fig], frequently mentioned in Scripture, and indigenous to Palestine. These figs appear in February before the leaves, which do not cover the tree until a month or six weeks later. When the leaves are fully out, the fruits should be ripe (Mat. 21. 19).

FISHES [fish'ĕs] of Palestine include thirty-three different species. The fishes of the Jordan and Lake Tiberias are extremely like those of the Nile. They are carp-like, large-scaled fishes, barbels, dace and bleak, loaches, etc. The Phœnicians engaged in sea-fishing (Ezek. 26. 5; Neh. 13. 16).

FITCHES [fĭtch'ĕs], an old form of vetches, refers to a very different plant, common in the East, with pungent black seeds, used to flavor bread (Isa. 28. 25; R.V. black cummin, Nigella sativa). In Ezek. 4. 9 the plant meant is spelt (q.v.).

FLAX [flăx] was grown in Egypt and Palestine from very early times. The tabernacle hangings and the high priest's dress were of linen (Ex. 27–29).

FLEA [flēa]. This insect is only twice mentioned in the Bible, viz., 1 Sam. 24. 14; 26. 20, where David compares himself to a flea, a thing too insignificant for Saul to pursue. Fleas are, however, a real pest in the Holy Land, as in most other Mediterranean countries, the huts and camps of the natives swarming with them.

FLOOD [flŭod]. [See DELUGE.]

FLY [flī]. Flies are mentioned in the Bible by two words: 1. Arob. This word occurs twice only, and both times in connection with the plague of flies sent upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians (Ex. 8. 21; Ps. 78. 45). 2. Zerub. This word occurs in Eccl. 10. 1, meaning flies generally, and in Isa. 7. 18, where the prophet alludes to some poisonous fly, possibly the horse-fly or gadfly, here used as a symbol for the military power of Egypt.

FOOD [fūod], Laws Regarding. In the law all animals are divided into the clean, which might be eaten, and the unclean, which were forbidden. It distinguishes as clean the beasts which both chew the cud and part the hoof; fishes with fins and scales; all birds (q.v.), except nineteen (or twenty), mostly carnivorous; and of creeping things, the locust (Lev. ch. 11, and Deut. ch. 14; cf. also Gen. 7. 2, 3; 8. 20). Laws more or less similar are found among the Egyptians, Hindus, Persians, and Mohammedans. The distinction between clean and unclean food, before it was established in God's name in the law, was a settled custom and tradition among the Jews, perhaps originally derived from the natural repugnance and loathing at the sight, or touch, or smell of many animals, from ill-effects on health traced to various meats, and from the place which, e.g., swine's flesh had in the customs of heathen idolatry. The purpose for which this traditional distinction of clean from unclean meats was elevated into a formal law is distinctly expressed in Lev. 20. 24–26; it was to form a part of the partition wall which should separate from the Gentiles the people chosen by Jehovah for His own possession. All those parts of animals which, according to the sacrificial ritual, were consecrated to the altar, were forbidden under severe penalties; especially blood, for (1) "the life of all flesh is the blood thereof," and must be given back to the Lord of life (Gen. 9. 4; Lev. 7. 26, 27; 17. 10–14; Deut. 12. 23; 1 Sam. 14. 32–34); and (2) blood was set apart to make atonement for the soul (Lev. 17. 11). Contrast the practice of the heathen, e.g. the Philistines (Zech. 9. 7), who in their idolatry drank the blood reeking in the sacrificial basin. Certain pieces of the fat of such animals as were suitable for sacrifices (oxen, sheep, and goats) were not to be eaten, but were consecrated to the Lord (Lev. 3. 11–17; 7. 23–25). It was forbidden also "to seethe a kid in his mother's milk" (Ex. 23. 19; 34. 26; Deut. 14. 21), which might possibly "be taken as equivalent to eating flesh with the blood, and be forbidden to the Hebrews along with the blood sacraments of the heathen" (Robertson Smith). The Arabs of the present day sometimes stew a lamb or kid in milk. The flesh of animals that had been strangled, or killed without being bled in the regular manner (Ex. 21. 28), and flesh that had been sacrificed to heathen idols, were likewise forbidden (Ex. 34. 15). Except in times of great distress or of religious declension (2 Kings 6. 25; cf. Ezek. 22. 26) these laws were well observed (cf. 2 Maccabees 6. 18 ff.). The scrupulousness of the Jews in regard to these laws of food, rendered it difficult for Jewish Christians and Gentile Christians to eat together, and to enjoy full religious fellowship (Gal. 2. 11 ff.), a compromise was therefore agreed to by the Gentile Christians to meet the Jewish Christians on this point (Acts ch. 15). Christ declared the whole of this legislation to be morally indifferent (Mat. 15. 11, 16–20; 23. 24–26; cf. Acts 10. 9–16; 11. 5–10; Rom. 14. 1 ff.; Col. 2. 16 ff.).

FOX [fŏx] should be rendered "jackal," except in Song of Sol. 2. 15 and Ezek. 13. 4, and in the New Testament.

FRANKINCENSE [frăpk-ĭn'çĕnse] (Ex. 30. 34; Mat. 2. 11), an odoriferous gum-resin, which appears (Jer. 6. 20) to have come from Arabia.

FROG [frŏg] (Ex. 8. 2, 7). Frogs are mentioned in the Old Testament only in connection with the second Egyptian plague.

FRONTLETS [frŏnt'lĕts] and Armlets [ärm lĕts] (Ex. 13. 16; Deut. 6. 8), the same as phylacteries. To carry out the injunction of the Law literally, four passages (Ex. 13. 1–10, 11–16; Deut. 6. 4–9; 11. 13–21) were copied on strips of parchment, enclosed in a leather case, and bound by a strap round the head or round the left arm.

G

GALATIANS [gă-lā'tĭans], the Epistle to the, was addressed to a group of churches (1. 2). The name Galatia was originally restricted to a tract of country west of Pontus and Cappadocia and north of Phrygia, which was seized by three tribes of Gauls (Galatians = Celts) about the beginning of the third century B.C., and which in 189 B.C. became a Roman dependency. The Roman province of Galatia, constituted in 25 B.C., included not only this region, but also Lycaonia, Pisidia, Pamphylia, and a large part of Phrygia. The churches here addressed were either among the northern Galatians, or, more probably, in Antioch, Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe, of the founding of which churches we have a full account in Acts 13. 13 to 14. 24.

Closely as St. Paul was bound to all his churches, he was exceptionally sympathetic with those of Galatia. During his absence, Judaizing teachers had found access to them, and taught them that it was only through the gate of Judaism any one could enter the Christian fold. The evident success of these agitators convinced St. Paul that a great crisis had arrived, and that, if Christianity was not to lose its universal character as the religion of free grace, it was time that he should, once for all, make clear the relation of Christ to the Law. The extraordinary compression, richness in argument, and convincing character of this epistle make it a masterpiece, even among St. Paul's writings. The freedom and the spirituality of true religion are once for all demonstrated.

GALBANUM [găl'bâ-nŭm], a resinous juice, used for the sacred incense (Ex. 30. 34).

GALILÆANS [găl'ĭ-lē'ans]. The people of Galilee (q.v.), being little under the influence of Jerusalem, the centre of Jewish piety and culture, were looked down upon as ignorant rustics. They bitterly resented, however, the Roman yoke, and supplied a large proportion of the Zealots (q.v.) (Acts 5. 37; Luke 13. 1).

GALILĒE [găl'ĭ-lēe] lay between Samaria on the south, the river Leontes on the north, the maritime plain on the west, and the Sea of Galilee, including the eastern coast of this, on the east. Exclusive of the lake, it measured about 50 miles north and south, by 25 to 35 east and west. It included the plain of Esdraelon; Lower Galilee, a series of parallel ranges, none over 1,850 feet; and Upper Galilee in the north, a series of plateaus surrounded by hills from 2,000 to 4,000 feet. The line between the two Galilees ran from the north end of the lake westward to Acre. Galilee is well watered and wooded, with stretches of good corn-land. Earthquakes are frequent. The greatest thoroughfare is the so-called Way of the Sea, connecting Damascus with the Levant.

GALILĒE, the Sea of, lies in a great ditch 680 feet below the level of the sea, and is nearly 13 miles long by 8 broad. On the west lay Tiberias, the new capital of Herod Antipas, with Magdala on Gennesaret, and Taricheæ where the fish were cured, probably to the south. On the north-west are the sites of Capernaum and Chorazin. The site of Bethsaida is on the east of Jordan. On the eastern shore lay Gergesa. Gadara lay about an hour and a half from the south-east corner of the lake, on heights about 2,300 feet above it.

GALL [gall], a bitter, poisonous herb, probably the colocynth or wild gourd (q.v.).

GARLICK [gär'lĭck] (Num. 11. 5), a species of onion which grows wild, and is cultivated in Palestine.

GATE [gāte]. In most Hebrew towns the only open space was just within the gate or gates (Neh. 8. 16). There the market was held (2 Kings 7. 1), disputes were decided (2 Sam. 15. 2), and all kinds of business transacted (Gen. 23. 10). The gate was the centre of the social life of the place (cf. Jer. 17. 19; Prov. 1. 21).

GAZA [gā'zâ] (Gen. 10. 19, etc.), a famous Philistine city on the south border of Palestine, close to the sea. It retained its importance as a caravan depot in all ages, and is now a city of 18,000 inhabitants.

GEMS [ǧĕms]. Three lists of gems occur in the Bible, viz.:—

1. The high-priest's breastplate (Ex. 28).
2. The ornaments of the king of Tyre (Ezek. 28).
3. The foundations of the heavenly Jerusalem (Rev. 21). Changes of name made in the R.V. are put in parentheses, those marked † being in the margin.

True gem-engraving (that is, the cutting of stones which, like quartz, chalcedony, beryl, etc., are harder than steel) appears to have been known in Nineveh about 730 B.C., but neither in Egypt nor in Europe till considerably later, though engraving on softer materials was common. The art appears to have reached the Mediterranean rather earlier than 570 B.C. [See "Handbook of Engraved Gems," by C. W. King, sec. 1.] It must, however, be remembered that as the Egyptians were able, before the days of the Exodus, to sculpture and even to polish granite, of which grains of quartz are a constituent, varieties of this mineral might occasionally have been engraved, though at present, so far as we are aware, no instances have been discovered.

GENERAL EPISTLES [jĕn'ĕr-al ĕ-pis'tlĕs], a term first applied to three epistles (James, 1 Peter, and 1 John), and afterwards to 2 Peter and Jude, the brief letters, 2 and 3 John, being finally classed with the five others for convenience. The designation implies that the letter was originally addressed to a wider circle of readers than the members of a single community of Christians.

GENESIS [jĕn'ĕ-sĭs]. [See PENTATEUCH.]

GENEVA BIBLE [jĕ-nē'vă bī'blĕ], 1560. Numerous editions of the English Bible and of the English New Testament were published during the reign of Edward the Sixth. Only one was issued while Mary Tudor was on the throne. The fiery persecution originated by that queen sent large numbers of English Reformers and scholars to the Continent. Many of these made Geneva their place of exile, and there they printed, in 1560, two years after the accession of Elizabeth, an entirely new edition of the Bible, which became for seventy-five years the Bible of the English people. Three men, Whittingham, Gilby, and Sampson, out of the little company of British Reformers gathered at Geneva, gave themselves to this work "for the space of two years and more, day and night." It is the first English Bible in which Roman type is used.

The notes of this Bible, which are numerous and racy, as well as its convenient size (small quarto), made it very popular. From the fact in Gen. 3. 7 the word "breeches" occurs, this edition is commonly called the "Breeches Bible."

GENNESARET [gen-nĕs'a-rĕt] (Mat. 14. 34; Mark 6. 53; Luke 5. 1), a fertile plain on the north-west shore of the Sea of Galilee.

GERIZIM [gĕr'ĭ-zĭm]. [See MOUNTAINS.]

GETHSEMANE [geth-sĕm'a-nē] (Mat. 26. 36; Mark 14. 32), a garden at the foot of the Mount of Olives. The exact position is unknown.

GIHON [gī'hŏn.] [See JERUSALEM.]

GILEAD [gĭl'e-ad] (Gen. 31. 23–25, etc.), the region east of the Jordan, one of the best watered and wooded in Palestine, with fine perennial streams, and forests of oak and pine.

GILGAL [gĭl'găl], the name of three places in Palestine: (1) the most famous (Josh. 4. 19, etc.), east of Jericho, in the Jordan valley; (2) in Mount Ephraim (2 Kings 2. 1); (3) Gilgal of the Goim or "nations" (Josh. 12. 23), in Sharon, south-east of Cæsarea. The name indicates a "circle" of stones.

GNAT [gnăt] (Mat. 23. 24). Gnats, being among the smallest of insects, are used in this metaphor to emphasize the contrast to a bulky animal like the camel.

GOATS [gōats] are an important item in the pastoral wealth of the East. They are reared alongside of, but not with, the sheep. The sheep close graze the tender herbage; the goats browse on the twigs of the bushes. Goats' milk is preferred to any other. The Syrian goat is larger and finer than ours, generally black.

GOAT, Wild. [Heb. ye'ĕlîm, fem. ya'alah. (Capra beden.) Arab. beden.] The Sinaitic ibex. The Hebrew is translated always by "wild goat," except in Prov. 5. 19, where the feminine form is rendered "roe." Another word, akko, occurs only in Deut. 14. 5, where it is translated "wild goat." The Sinaitic ibex is a very beautiful creature, of a light fawn color, with very long recurved and regularly knotted horns, smaller and more slender than the Alpine, still more than the Himalayan species.

GOLD [gōld] (Heb. zahab, Gr. chrysos). This metal apparently was not obtained in Palestine; some was imported from Sheba (part of Arabia), some from Ophir. The last district has been identified both with the western coast of India and with some part of the eastern coast of Africa. It has been suggested of late that it may have been in Mashonaland, where very ancient mines and gold-workings have been described by Mr. Theodore Bent. Gold, as we know from the contents of ancient graves, was in use for ornamental purposes at a very early date, even when stone held the place of metal for weapons and tools. It was no doubt obtained (and this is still one source of supply) by washing the river-sands and other alluvial deposits.

GOLGOTHA [gŏl'go-thă]. [See JERUSALEM.]

GOMORRAH [go-mŏr'rah] (Gen. 10. 19, etc.), one of the five cities of the "plain," mentioned with Sodom, Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar. These cities probably stood in the plains north of the Dead Sea.

GOPHER-WOOD [gō'phĕr-wo͝od] (Gen. 6. 14), perhaps cypress.

GOSHEN [gō'shen]. [See EXODUS.]

GOSPELS [gŏs'pĕls], the. Each of the four Gospels has its peculiar design and its distinctive method. Matthew exhibits Jesus as the Messiah foretold in prophecy; Mark depicts in rapid but vivid outlines Jesus putting His mighty power in action; Luke portrays Jesus as the Friend of man and universal Savior; and John completes the picture by presenting Jesus preëminently as the Son of God. The Gospel of St. John, evidently written last, is properly distinguished from the others, which resemble each other more closely. From early times the "symbols" of Rev. 4. 7 have been assigned to the four evangelists—to St. Matthew, the man; St. Mark, the lion; St. Luke, the calf; St. John, the eagle. More than one-half of all the narratives describes the events of the last year; more than one-third is devoted to the few weeks which closed with the death and resurrection of our Lord.

The first three Gospels have been termed "Synoptic," because a common outline is pursued. Much of the matter throughout is common to the three, but the arrangement is rarely the same in all, except in the accounts of Passion Week; and, when the same incident is given by all, the language is rarely the same for ten consecutive words (in the Greek). The best explanation is that the common matter represents in general the story of Jesus Christ as preached by the apostles and others; and that, when written Gospels were needed, these three writers, independently of each other, each with added material, wrote the accounts we now have. St. Matthew had his own knowledge of the events; St. Mark learned from St. Peter; St. Luke gathered material when in Palestine (58–60 A.D.), while eye-witnesses were living, probably using, for the parts peculiar to his narrative (especially ch. 1, 2), some written documents or memoranda.

Some hold that all three Gospels were based on one or more common documents. It is assumed that there were two original documents referred to by Papias (died 163 A.D.): one, by St. Matthew, containing the Oracles (Logia), in Hebrew; the other, by St. Mark, derived from St. Peter. But there is no agreement as to the extent of these assumed documents. The faithful use of a common document or documents would have led to greater similarity both in order and in language.

The independence of the Synoptic Gospels involves the probability that they were written within a few years of each other, and that the testimony they present is that of three distinct witnesses to the main facts respecting our Lord's life on earth.

GOSPELS, HARMONY OF. [See LIFE OF JESUS, pages 53–67.]

GOURD [gōurd], a poisonous fruit which grew on a "wild vine" at Gilgal (2 Kings 4. 38–41). The plant that best fits the narrative is the colocynth, which is found in sandy places near the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea. The "vine of Sodom" (Deut. 32. 32) and the "gall" (Deut. 29. 18) seem to have been this same plant, and Jonah's gourd a climbing plant of a similar kind. The R.V., however, gives palma-christi, the castor-oil plant. The cedar knops (knobs) of 1 Kings 6. 18 (see R.V.) were probably gourd-shaped.

GRASSHOPPER [grâss'hŏp'pēr]. [See LOCUST.]

GREAT BIBLE [greāt bī'ble], 1539–1541, so called because of its size — the page of type measures 13¼ by 7½ inches — was an edition prepared by Coverdale, which Cromwell, as vicar-general, ordered to be "set up in some convenient place" within every church. It was first printed in Paris, and six other editions were printed in England within two years. For the first of these Cranmer wrote a preface, and hence this Bible is often called "Cranmer's Bible."

GRECIANS [grē'cians] (Acts 6. 1; 9. 29; 11. 20, A.V.). [See HELLENISTS.]

GREYHOUND [grā'hound'] (Prov. 30. 31), A.V. and R.V.; but R.V. margin "war-horse." As the Hebrew means "girt up or slim in loins," it may be either. The greyhound is represented on the Assyrian sculptures as employed in chasing the gazelle.

GRINDING [grīnd'ing] (Isa. 47. 2). Corn was ground into flour in hand-mills or querns consisting of two hard circular stones, one revolved upon the other by means of a peg or handle. The labor was commonly performed by women (cf. Mat. 24. 41). The Law forbade any one to take another's millstone in pledge (Deut. 24. 6).

GROVE [grōve]. [See ASHĒRAH.]

H

HABAKKUK [ha-băk'kuk] prophesied about 625 B.C. in the reign of Josiah (640–608 B.C.) and was a contemporary of Zephaniah and Jeremiah.

I. Ch. 1 and 2 are concerned with the work and fate of the Chaldæans, that terrible, relentless, and resistless nation (1. 5–11), from whose fury a remnant shall be preserved by their trust in Jehovah (2. 2–4). In five "woes" the Chaldæans are condemned on account of their greed (2. 6–8); their self-destructive ambition (2. 9–11); their cruelty and godlessness (2. 12–14); their shameless treatment of the nations (2. 15–17); their idolatry in the face of Jehovah in His Temple (2. 18–20).

II. Ch. 3 puts in lyric form, with ample detail, the thought of the vision of Jehovah with which the prophecy opens (ver. 1–15), and its effect upon the prophet's own spirit. Speaking for his people, he exults that no privation or suffering can rob him of his trust and joy in God (ver. 16–19). [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

HAGGADA [hăg-gä'dä] (Heb., properly "narrative," "legend"), the name for that part of the traditions of the Jewish scribes consisting of the elaboration of the historical and didactic portions of Scripture. As contrasted with the Halacha (q.v.), which confined itself to the exposition and application of the text, its handling of the Scripture is unrestrained. It freely admits additions and interpolations, including legends. Here "there was really but one rule for the 'investigator,' viz. the right of making anything of a passage which his wit and understanding enabled him" (Shürer). [See TALMUD.]

HAGGAI [hăg'ga-ī], a Jewish prophet, in his old age came forward at Jerusalem, in 520 B.C., to urge the rebuilding of the Temple. The work was begun on the twenty-fourth of September of the same year. His book consists of addresses on this theme, in plain, unadorned style. [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

HAGIOGRAPHA [hā'ĝī-ŏg'rà-phà]. The third division of the books included in the Hebrew Canon have a more diversified character than either of the classes of Law and Prophecy, and they have never received a more definite designation than Ketubim (Heb. "Writings"), or Hagiographa (Gr. "Sacred Writings"). [See OLD TESTAMENT CANON.]

HAIR [hâir]. The Hebrews regarded a strong growth of hair both on the head and on the chin as an ornament to a man. By many it was worn hanging down to the shoulder (cf. 2 Sam. 14. 26). To cut off a man's beard (q.v.) was to offer him the grossest insult (cf. 2 Sam. 10. 4). Only in times of mourning was the head shaved (cf. Ezek. 7. 18; Amos 8. 10) with a sharp knife or "barber's razor" (Ezek. 5. 1). That the hair was also worn in locks or ringlets is shown by the case of Samson (Judg. 16. 13); see also Isa. 3. 24.

HALACHA [hà-lä'chà] (Heb. "that which is current"), the Rabbinical law of custom, which was developed beside the written Torah or Law of Moses. It was distinguished from the Haggada (q.v.), as being the legal part of the oral tradition of the scribes, including their expositions of the Torah, and all the additional laws which were recognized as binding by the Jews after the Exile. [See TALMUD.]

HALLEL [hăl'lel], Hallelujah. [See MUSIC.]

HAM [hăm], Land of. [See EGYPT.]

HAMATH [hā'math], in Syria, had an Aramæan population, but its Hittite monuments show that it was at one time under the Hittites. It made alliance with David (2 Sam. 8. 10), and in 740 B.C. with Azariah (against Assyria). Conquered by the Assyrians in 720 B.C., the people of Hamath were transported to Samaria (2 Kings 17. 24, 30). [See HITTITES.]

HARAN hā'ran]. [See ABRAHAM.]

HARE [hâre] (Heb. arnebeth). Though the name occurs only in the lists of Leviticus and Deuteronomy, there is no question about the translation—the hare being very common, and the Arabic name the same as the Hebrew.

HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. [See LIFE OF JESUS, pages 53-67.]

HARP [härp]. Prominent Jewish musical instrument invented by Jubal, Gen. 4. 21; of various shapes and sizes, and of different numbers of strings, played with fingers of quill. [See MUSIC.]

HART [härt] and HIND [hīnd] of the fallow deer, the native deer of Syria, now almost, if not altogether, extinct in Palestine, must have been very common in ancient times (cf. Ajalon, "the place of deer"). Deer are often depicted on the monuments both of Egypt and Assyria. The bones of the red deer have been found in caverns in Lebanon.

HARVEST [här'vĕst], Feast of. [See FEASTS.]

dress of the people was probably like that of the modern Bedawin—a colored handkerchief bound round the head with a cord so as to shade both neck and ears from the sun. In later times the rich wore a turban formed of a long strip of fine linen rolled many times round the head (Isa. 3. 23, R.V.). Yet another "headtire" (Isa. 3. 20, R.V.) was worn on festal occasions, and especially by brides or bridegrooms (Isa. 61. 10; Ezek. 24. 17). [See ORNAMENTS.]

HEBREW [hē'brēw]. The Old Testament, omitting the Apocrypha, is written in Hebrew, with the exception of a few portions written in Aramaic (q.v.). The Hebrew language is one of the large group of dialects which have been named Semitic languages, after Shem, who was supposed to be the ancestor of most of the peoples speaking them. These languages include also the Assyrian and Babylonian, the Arabic, the Samaritan, the Aramaic, the Syriac, the Phœnician, the Punic or Carthaginian, the Ethiopic, and a number of other tongues or dialects known to us imperfectly by means of inscriptions.

Hebrew as a spoken language fell into disuse about the time of the return of the Jews from the Babylonian Captivity, having been displaced by the Aramaic; but it remained in use as a literary language, and as a sacred language to be used in the offices of religion.

HEBREWS, a name probably first given to the Israelites by the inhabitants of Canaan, their ancestor being called (Gen. 14. 13) Abram "the Hebrew"—i.e. one who has migrated "from beyond" (Jordan). In the Old Testament time it continued to be the name most used by foreigners, bearing a similar relation to the native names, Children of Israel or Jews, as in the case of other nations the foreign names, Greeks (Lat. Graeci), Hungarians ("foreigners"), Welsh ("foreigners"), bear to Hellenes, Magyars, Cymry.

In the New Testament, Hebrews means either the Jews as distinguished from the Gentiles (2 Cor. 11. 22; Phil. 3. 5), or the Palestinian Jews (Acts 6. 1) as distinguished from the Hellenists (q.v.).

HEBREWS, the Epistle to the, was addressed to a purely Hebrew church (cf. 5. 12; 6. 10; 10. 32; 12. 4; 13. 7-24). Assuming the probability of the epistle having been written from Italy (13. 24), it follows with at least equal probability that it was sent to the church in Jerusalem, in which case it must have been written between the martyrdom of St. James in 63 and the destruction of the city in 70 A.D.

The epistle is anonymous. The churches of the East, as a whole, never doubted its Pauline authorship. Calvin and Erasmus suggested as the author Clement of Rome, Luther Apollos, while others have attributed it to St. Luke or to Barnabas.

The author calls his epistle a "word of exhortation" (13. 22). It was, indeed, the first formal treatise on Christian doctrine; but it had a practical aim — to encourage the Hebrew Christians to find the fulfilment of all their hopes in Christianity, and to move them to renounce the shadows of Judaism for the realities of the gospel.

cient city in the high mountains of Judah, 20 miles south of Jerusalem. The modern town of 10,000 inhabitants surrounds what is supposed to be the cave of Machpelah.

HEDGEHOG [hĕdge'-hŏg'], the rendering in Coverdale's version of the word translated "bittern" in A.V. and "porcupine" in R.V. (Isa. 14. 23; 34. 11; Zeph. 2. 14). The hedgehog and porcupine are both common in Palestine.

HELLENISTS [hĕl'lĕn-ĭsts], Greek-speaking Jews, in Judæa or abroad, many of whom had adopted a measure of Greek (Hellenic) culture and manners (Acts 6. 1; 9. 29).

HEMLOCK [hĕm'lŏck] (Hos. 10. 4), some poisonous cornfield plant, like a poppy; or a wild gourd (q.v.). In Amos 6. 12, R.V., the same word is rendered "wormwood" (q.v.).

HENNA [hĕn'ná]. [See CAMPHIRE.]

HEROD [hĕr'od], "the Great," the founder of the last Jewish dynasty, was the son of Antipater, an Idumæan, who had been the Asmonæan governor in Edom, and who rose to a position of great influence as the minister of Hyrcanus II., the last Asmonæan king and high-priest. Antipater saw that the future of Judæa was in the hands of Rome, and cunningly ingratiated himself first with Pompey, then, after his death, with Julius Cæsar (who rewarded his assistance with men and money in Egypt in 48 B.C. by making him governor of Judæa, Samaria, and Galilee, under the nominal sovereignty of Hyrcanus), and finally, after Cæsar's assassination in 44 B.C., with Cassius, the leader of the Republican party. Herod consistently followed his father's policy. Attaching himself in turn to Pompey, Julius Cæsar, Cassius, Antonius, and finally Augustus, he took advantage of all the vicissitudes of Roman affairs, and saw himself at last the "confederate king" (rex socius) of the Roman emperor. A decree of the Roman senate made him king of Judæa in 40 B.C., and in 37 B.C. he married Mariamne, granddaughter of Hyrcanus, and, with the help of two Roman legions, captured Jerusalem. The next nine years he spent in strengthening his position. He executed forty-five members (the Sadducee majority) of the Sanhedrin, and murdered every member of the Asmonæan house, the last his wife Mariamne. The next fourteen years (28-14 B.C.) were chiefly devoted to the erection of public buildings, including a theatre in Jerusalem, and a great amphitheatre outside the gates, besides numerous heathen temples at other places, and new cities, the chief of which was Cæsarea, named after the emperor. His greatest work was the rebuilding of the temple (q.v.). But the golden eagle, the symbol of Roman supremacy, which he placed over its chief entrance, was to the people a continual reminder of the hated Idumæan's subservience to Rome. All the material advantages of his despotic rule, the tranquillity of the country, and his remissions of taxation, encouragement of trade and agriculture, and provision for the poor in time of scarcity, were forgotten; his life was constantly threatened by conspiracies, which he met by the activity of a secret police and the most cruel torture. In the year 7 B.C. he caused Alexander and Aristobulus, his two sons by Mariamne, to be strangled at Samaria, a crime which led Augustus to remark that he would rather be one of Herod's swine than one of his sons. Another son, Antipater, who had attempted his father's life, was executed five days before the death of Herod in 4 B.C. His sons shared his dominions according to his will. The elder, Archelaus, ethnarch of Judæa, Samaria, and Idumæa, was deposed by Augustus for misgovernment in 6 A.D., and died in Gaul. The eastern and northern provinces fell to Philip, who died in 34 A.D. Herod Antipas, who received Galilee and Peræa, was deposed by Caligula in 39 A.D. The Herod of Acts 12 was a grandson of Herod "the Great," and was surnamed Agrippa. He obtained from Caligula the inheritance of Philip, and also that of Antipas, to which Claudius added Judæa and Samaria, so that from 41 to 44 A.D. he ruled over the whole of Palestine. He succeeded by hypocritical art in gaining the confidence of the people. His son, Herod Agrippa II. (Acts ch. 25 and 26), after doing all in his power to dissuade the Jews from making war against the Romans, took their side against his countrymen, and after Jerusalem was taken, he lived chiefly at Tiberias as a Roman vassal prince, till he died childless in 100 A.D.

HERODIANS [hĕ-rō'dĭ-ans], a political and non-patriotic minority, in the main a court-party, which stood to the Idumæan dynasty of the Herods in Galilee much as the Sadducæan nobility stood to the Roman procurator in Judæa. They made less pretence, however, of aiming higher than at worldly prosperity. Their natural enemies were the strict Pharisees; and it is a mark of the shifts to which both parties were driven in their hatred of Jesus, that they united to work His ruin (Mark 3. 6; Mat. 22. 16). The "leaven of Herod" (Mark 8. 15) was worldly wisdom.

HEXAPLA [hĕx'ă-plă]. The great Christian scholar Origen, in Alexandria, in the early part of the third century, arranged the extant translations of the Old Testament side by side in parallel columns for the purpose of study, and with them he placed the Hebrew text and a transliteration of the Hebrew text into Greek letters. The translations given are the LXX., and those of Aquila, a Jewish proselyte from Pontus (beginning of second century), Theodotion, a Jewish proselyte from Ephesus (later half of second century), and Symmachus, an Ebionite (end of second century). The entire work he called the Hexăpla (or six-fold), on account of the six columns into which each page was divided.

If this work of Origen had come down to us, we should have had three Greek translations to compare with the Septuagint (q.v.). Unfortunately, there is nothing preserved beyond a number of quotations.

HIDDEKEL [hĭd'de-kĕl]. [See Eden.]

HIGH-PLACE [hĭgh'-plāçe'], a hill or artificial mound used for worship and sacrifice to a local deity. The command to throw down the high-places (Num. 33. 52) was very imperfectly obeyed, and both kings and people sacrificed on them (1 Kings 3. 2; 2 Chr. 28. 4, etc.). The prophets protested with indignation against such worship (Hos. 10. 8, etc.), and reforming kings showed their zeal by destroying them (2 Kings 18. 4).

HIGH-PRIEST [hĭgh'-prēst']. [See under Priests.]

HINNOM [hĭn'nom]. [See Jerusalem.]

HITTITES [hĭt'tites], first mentioned by Sargon of Agade in inscriptions, came from the Taurus mountains, and at an early date conquered part of Northern Syria. They made Carchemish on the Euphrates one of their capitals, and established themselves in Kadesh near Emesa. After many years of war, Ramses II. of Egypt made a treaty of peace with the Hittite king in 1365 B.C. Hittites had previously settled in the south of Palestine, at Hebron (Gen. 23. 3) and Jerusalem (Ezek. 16. 3). It is the northern Hittites whose kings are referred to in 1 Kings 10. 29 and 2 Kings 7. 6 (see also Judg. 1. 26 and 1 Kings 11. 1).

The Hittite power, which in the time of Ramses II. seems to have extended over the greater part of Asia Minor as well as over Northern Syria, afterwards decayed, and ended with the capture of Carchemish by Sargon in 717 B.C.

The Hittites used a peculiar hieroglyphic writing, not yet deciphered. The Egyptian monuments agree with their own in representing them as short, thick-limbed, with protrusive jaw and nose, beardless face, high cheek-bones, yellow skin, and black hair and eyes. Their language was probably non-Semitic.

HIVITES [hī'vītes], the "villagers" of Palestine as opposed to the townsfolk (Josh. 11. 3; Judg. 3. 3; 2 Sam. 24. 7).

HOLY GHOST [hō'lĭ gōst], HOLY SPIRIT [hō'lĭ spĭr'ĭt]. The "Spirit of God" is often referred to in the Old Testament (Gen. 1. 2; 6. 3; Isa. 40. 13, etc.), but it is in the New Testament that He becomes clearly revealed as a Person in the Godhead. He is there called "the Spirit" (Gal. 3. 2), "the Holy Spirit" (Eph. 1. 13), "Spirit of Truth" (John 14. 17), "Spirit of the Lord" (Acts 8. 39), "Spirit of Christ" (Rom. 8. 9), "Spirit of God" (1 Cor. 2. 11), Comforter (q.v.), and Advocate (q.v.). He is "the Lord, the Giver of Life" (cf. John 6. 63), first of natural (Job. 26. 13; Ps. 104. 30) and then of spiritual life (John 3. 5; Tit. 3. 5). Equal honor with the Father and with the Son is ascribed to Him in Mat. 28. 19; 2 Cor. 13. 14. Throughout the New Testament the American revisers would for "Holy Ghost" adopt uniformly the rendering "Holy Spirit."

HORNET [hôr'nĕt] (Ex. 23. 28; Deut. 7. 20; Josh. 24. 12). Hornets belong to the same order of insects as bees and wasps, and are closely allied to the latter. All these insects have four wings; they wound by a sting lodged in the end of the abdomen, and inject a poisonous fluid into the wound.

HORSE [hôrse]. The horse is not depicted on Egyptian monuments before the Eighteenth Dynasty. Except in Isa. 28. 28, the horse is never mentioned in the Old Testament but in connection with war. It was the important arm of the Egyptian, Assyrian, and Hittite armies. David and Solomon first began to use cavalry and chariots, Solomon procuring his horses from Egypt.

HORSELEECH [hôrse'lēech] (Prov. 30. 15). The horseleech (hæmopis sanguisuga) and the medicinal leech (hirudo medicinalis) are both common in Palestine, as well as several other kinds of leeches. Leeches abound in waters and damp places of hot countries, and frequently become a regular pest, attacking men and animals alike.

HOSEA [ho-zē'ȧ] ("salvation") was the last of the great prophets of the northern kingdom. Ch. 1–3 were written about 748 B.C., and ch. 4–14 about 734 B.C. Hosea (3. 4) predicts the coming Captivity with more definiteness than had been done by Amos. The situation was complicated by the policy of an alliance with Egypt: he warns his people against it. The moral condition of the community is shown, by the allusions of the prophet, to have kept pace in its degeneration with the decay and dissolution of the nation. Ch. 1–3 have to do with the painful and pathetic personal history of Hosea, which he uses to symbolize Jehovah's separation from His people, and their restoration to the privileges of His worship and favor; ch. 4–6 charge gross iniquity against the people, priests, and princes; ch. 7–10 threaten punishment, culminating in exile (9. 3, 6; 10. 5, 6); ch. 11–13 are full of hopeful remonstrance and tender expostulation; and ch. 14 consists of entreaty and rich promises of blessing as the result of repentance.

The book is an abstract of numerous discourses, extending over many years. Hosea is the most subjective and individual of the prophets. Many of his passages are odes or dirges. In "tragic pathos" he is unexcelled. His discourses are full of pregnant observations on life and manners, as well as of moral reflections epigrammatically expressed. [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

HOUSE (Heb. beth, common in compound names of places, e.g. Beth-el). The nomad's house was his tent. The settled Hebrew dwelt generally in a one-story building with few and small windows, built of stones and mud, and flat-roofed. Here both the family and the animals found shelter, a raised dais separating the two. But, except in bad weather, they spent their day either in the open field or on the house-roof, where they also slept.

HYÆNA [hȳ-ē'nȧ]. "Speckled bird," A.V. and R.V. (Jer. 12. 9), is probably the hyæna, as in LXX. Zeboim (1 Sam. 13. 18) means "valley of hyænas."

HYKSOS KINGS. [See ABRAHAM and EGYPT.]

HYSSOP [hĭs'sŏp], a plant growing on walls and rocks, with hairy leaves and branches, used for sprinkling (Ex. 12. 22; Ps. 51. 7; John 19. 29; Heb. 9. 19–22).

I

IMMANUEL [Im-măn'ū-ĕl] ("God with us"), the name of the child whose birth was prophesied in Isa. 7. 14 and 8. 8, passages fulfilled in the birth of Christ, in whom God became man. See Matt. 1. 23.

INGATHERING [In'găth'ēr-ĭng], Feast of. [See FEASTS.]

IRON [ī'ŭrn] (Heb. barzel, Gr. sideros). Probably this metal is not always meant (see also ADAMANT), for its ores are scarce in Palestine. It was, however, known to the Hebrews at a very early date, and the art of tempering it and making steel gradually was acquired. Most, if not all, of the iron in use must have been imported. It occurs, however, in parts of Sinai, Egypt, and Assyria.

ISAAC [ī'saac] (Heb. "laugher"), son of Abraham (q.v.) and Sarah, and half-brother of Ishmael, was born when his parents were advanced in age. By his wife Rebekah he was the father of Jacob and Esau. He died at Hebron, a hundred and eighty years old.

ISAIAH [ī-sā'ĭah] ("Jehovah is salvation"). The Book of Isaiah is the work of Isaiah, the son of Amoz, who prophesied in the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah (Isa. 1. 1, etc.). Tradition says that he survived into the reign of Manasseh, and was martyred by him.

Isaiah abounds in allusions to Babylon, Elam, and Media. He advocated the policy of the separateness of Israel, opposing the Assyrian alliance of Ahaz, and equally opposing all alliances with the neighboring peoples, or with Egypt, or with the Babylonian-Elamitic combination against Assyria. During his life the Assyrian and Babylonian empires were part of the time identical — the great oppressing power; and part of the time Babylon was a dangerous seducer, striving to lead the chosen people into disastrous hostilities with Assyria.

More important, however, than the political burden of his revelations, are the great number of significant prophecies regarding the future Kingdom and its Lord. As the evangelical and Messianic prophet, Isaiah is more prominently cited in the New Testament, and is more read and reverenced by Christians, than any other. It is from Isaiah that we have the prediction regarding the Child that is born unto us, the Son given unto us; the child of the Virgin; the Servant of Jehovah, whose sufferings are described so graphically by the prophet as if he had stood under the cross on Calvary.

The book, as it stands, consists of two principal parts, the first containing thirty-nine chapters, and the second twenty-seven.

The first part contains five groups of prophecies: first, the introductory discourse (ch. 1. 1); second, four prophecies (ch. 2-4, 5, 6, 7-12); third, a series of "Burdens" on Babylon, Philistia, Moab, etc. (ch. 13-23); fourth, other prophecies (ch. 24-35); fifth, a historical sketch and included messages (ch. 36-39).

The second part is divided into three divisions by the phrase, "No peace to the wicked," closing ch. 48 and ch. 57. Each of these divisions has three subdivisions, and each of the subdivisions is resolvable into three separate, though often closely connected, parts, the whole forming one of the grandest poetical compositions existing in any language.

The theme of ch. 40-66 is the Servant of Jehovah. This Servant is none other than the Son of God Himself, and the 53d chapter a description of the sufferings of the Lord in His great Passion. Nowhere in the Bible is the doctrine of the Atonement, the meaning of Christ's humiliation and of His exaltation, set forth more clearly.

Every part of the book presupposes the doctrine that Israel was a people chosen to fulfil God's purpose for the nations, and that God had made a promise to Abraham, to Israel, to David,—a promise conditional in some of its aspects on Israel's obedience, but in itself irrevocable and eternally operative; a promise which connected itself with the day of the Lord always impending, with the last days, with the birth of a promised Seed, with an endless kingdom, with a holy anointing; a promise in virtue of which there should at last be wrought a universal redemption through the blood of the Only-Begotten One.

ISHMAEL [ĭsh'ma-el]. [See ABRAHAM.]

ISHMAELITES [ĭsh'ma-el-ītes] occupied the central part of Arabia. The Koreish of Mecca, the tribe of Mohammed, was descended from them. One of their twelve tribes was the Nabathæans. Some of the tribes spoke Aramaic, but the language of the larger part of them was Arabic.

ISRAEL [ĭz'ra-el] ("he who striveth with God" or "God striveth," Gen. 32. 28, R. V. margin), the new name which Jacob received after his mysterious struggle at the Jabbok, and hence the name of the whole people descended from him. The name "Hebrews" was mostly applied to them by foreigners; as was also the name "Jews," which arose at the time when Judah, after the fall of the northern kingdom, represented the entire people. After the separation under Jeroboam, the name Israel was confined to the kingdom of the ten tribes, also called Ephraim after the chief of these. Moral and religious degeneracy, with frequent revolutions and changes of rulers, prepared its fall (772 B.C.). The Assyrians led the best of the people in exile, from which they never returned, and the remnant left were included in the mixed people known as the Samaritans (q.v.).

ISTAR. [See ASHTORETH.]

ITALY [ĭt'a-lĭ], the peninsula in the middle of Southern Europe. The name was applied at different periods to the whole peninsula and to the southern part (Acts 18. 2; 27. 1. 6; Heb. 13. 24).

J

JACINTH [jā'çĭnth] (Gr. hyakinthos). The modern jacinth or hyacinth is a variety of zircon (zirconium silicate), but the name was anciently applied, so far as can be determined, to a variety of sapphire. The zircon is of a reddish or yellowish color, and harder than steel.

JACOB [jā'cob] (Heb. "supplanter"), the son of Isaac and Rebekah, and father of the people of Israel, gained by craft the birthright and blessing which his father meant for his brother Esau. He fled to his uncle Laban, who treated him with selfish and calculating cunning, violating the terms of their agreement often. Yet he enriched himself in Laban's service, and Laban's daughters, Leah and Rachel, became his wives. On his return, after the mysterious struggle in the darkness of night at the Jabbok, his name was changed to Israel (see R.V. Gen. 32. 28), and he was reconciled to Esau. His old age was made sorrowful by evil deeds of his sons, till at last he found a refuge in Egypt with his favorite Joseph.

JAMES [jāmes] "the elder," son of Zebedee and brother of St. John, one of the Twelve, was martyred under Herod Agrippa (44 A.D.).—JAMES "the younger," son of Alphæus, was also an apostle, called "the brother of the Lord." He was a "pillar" in the church at Jerusalem (Gal. 2. 9), and had probably been honored by a special appearance of our risen Lord to him (1. Cor. 15. 7). His judgment prevailed in the council at Jerusalem (Acts 15. 13-29). For his piety he was called "James the Just." According to Josephus, he was stoned to death by order of Ananus, the high priest, between the departure of Festus and the arrival of the new procurator Albinus (probably in 63 A.D.).

His letter "to the twelve tribes which are of the Dispersion" (1. 1, R.V.) consists mainly of moral precepts, added to each other without any obvious plan. Hence it has been called "The Christian Book of Proverbs."

Some date the epistle before the council at Jerusalem (50 A.D.); others, shortly before the writer's death. The former view makes it the earliest written book of the New Testament; the errors combated point to the later date. This places the letter after the earlier group of Pauline epistles, but does not necessarily involve any reference to them. Jerusalem was probably the place of writing.

JASPER [jăs'pẽr] (Heb. yahspheth, Gr. iaspis). A variety of the chalcedony (q.v.), richly colored (red, deep green, or brown) and opaque; but in ancient times the term was applied to translucent kinds, or in other words to colored chalcedony or agate (q.v.).

JEBUSITES [jĕb'u-sītes], the tribe which occupied Jerusalem at the time of the Israelitish conquest of Canaan. They seem to have been of the Amorite race (Josh. 10. 5, 6). In Num. 13. 29 they are classed with the Hittites and Amorites as dwelling in "the mountains" or "hill-country."

JEHOVAH [jĕ-hō'vâh], the name of the God of Israel, in the English Bible, as in the LXX. and the Greek New Testament, translated "Lord" (Gr. Kyrios, Heb. Adonai). The Jews, out of reverence for the holy name, shrank from pronouncing it, and wherever it occurs in the Old Testament, read "Adonai"; and this practice, which prevailed from at least the third century B.C., influenced the translators. When at a later date the text, which originally consisted of consonants alone without the connecting vowels, was provided with vowel-marks, the scribes then attached to the four consonants of the ineffable name JHVH the vowels of Adonay, to indicate that the name Adonai was to be uttered by the reader. Christian theologians, from about 1500 A.D., put the consonants of the original name along with the vowels of the substituted name, and thus produced the name "Jehovah." The original pronunciation of the name JHVH was probably Yahweh, an abbreviation of which appears in the last syllable of hallelujah, and of about two hundred proper names compounded with jah (e.g. Azar-iah, properly pronounced Azar-yah, "the Lord hath helped"). The R.V. (Ex 3. 15) notes that the name is from the same root as Heb. Ehyeh ("I will be"); see also Ex. 3. 14 (R.V. margin).

JEPHTHAH [jĕph'thah], of Gilead, a judge in Israel (Judg. 11. 1–12. 7; Heb. 11. 32). An illegitimate son, he was driven from home by his father's heirs, and lived the life of a freebooter in the land of Tob, east of Jordan, till the elders of the tribes summoned him to their help against the Amorites, who had oppressed them for eighteen years. Returning a conqueror, he sacrificed his daughter, his only child, in fulfilment of a thoughtless vow.

JEREMIAH [jĕr'e-mī'ah] ("Jehovah rejecteth"). Jeremiah's prophesying began in the thirteenth year of Josiah, 626 B.C. (Jer. 1. 2; 25. 1, 3), and covered the time following to the Exile. He was of priestly descent (1. 1). His prophetic career began at an early age (1. 6). In later years he was the leader of a small minority in Judah against three great wrongs—the religious apostasies of his people, their neglect of justice, and the false patriotism that led them to break faith by repeated revolts against Babylon. His services in this last matter were recognized by the Babylonian authorities (39. 11–14; 40. 1–5).

We have an account (ch. 36) of the writing of certain of Jeremiah's prophecies, from dictation, by his friend Baruch. This seems to imply that these prophecies had been originally uttered without writing. It is true that his prophecies contain more of the biographical element than other prophetical books. Nevertheless, the core of the book is Messianic, culminating in the references to the Redeemer's person and work: 23. 5, 6; 30; 31; 33.

Jeremiah's mission was to testify to a doomed people, and then to witness their obduracy and their doom; but common opinion probably exaggerates the sorrowful element in the career of the "weeping prophet." It should be noticed that he prophesied concerning the return from the Exile, as well as concerning the Exile itself (e.g. 24. 5–7; 29–33). It was especially his prophecies that actually led the exiles to the movement for return (Dan. 9. 2; 2 Chr. 36. 21; Ezra 1. 1).

Jeremiah insists especially upon the Lord's unfailing covenant with Israel and with David (e.g. 31. 31–37; 33). He gives shape to the doctrine of a righteous "Branch" to grow up unto David (23. 5; 33. 15). Like the other prophets, Jeremiah is a prophet not merely of rebuke and warning, but also of the Messianic promise and hope.

JEREMIAH, Epistle of. [See under BARUCH.]

JERICHO [jĕr'i-chō] (Num. 22. 1, etc.), an ancient city on the west side of the Jordan plain, famous for its palms and gardens of balsam, which have now disappeared.

JEROBOAM [jĕr'o-bō'am], the son of Nebat, the founder of the northern kingdom of Israel, took advantage of the other tribes' envy of Judah and Jerusalem, and the general discontent with Solomon's oppressive taxation, to revolt against him. After the death of Solomon, on his son Rehoboam's blunt refusal to lighten the people's burdens, Jeroboam became the leader of the ten northern tribes in their separation (variously dated from 985 to 937 B.C.). The re-establishment of the "high places" (q.v.) served to lend the political change a religious consecration. Golden calves, ox images, similar to that which Aaron made in the wilderness, were set up at Dan in the north and Bethel on the southern frontier of Jeroboam's kingdom, to win the people away from the Temple at Jerusalem, where God was worshipped without images.

Jeroboam II. (2 Kings 14. 13–29), ruled the kingdom of Israel from 790 to 749 B.C. (according to another reckoning, from 781 to 741). He conquered in the north and east all the lands that had belonged to David and Solomon, and encouraged trade with the Phœnicians; but in his reign the Baal-worship which Jehu had extirpated again arose, bringing with it the moral corruption in which Amos and Hosea foresaw the ruin of the king's house and of the nation (Amos 7. 7–15; Hos. 1–3).

JERUSALEM [je-ru'sa-lĕm] stood on the spurs running south from the watershed of Judæa, the site being naturally strong except on the northwest. The water supply was from an intermittent spring, and from rock-cut tanks. The town occupied two hills, and the Temple stood on a third ridge to the east, divided from the range of Olivet on its east by the deep gorge of the KIDRON, or valley of Jehoshaphat. The HINNOM Valley, starting on the west and curving round to meet the Kidron, formed a deep ravine, bounding on the west and south the high flat hill of the upper city, the north and east sides of which were protected by a third valley joining the other two at their junction. This third valley had two heads, a long narrow trench running north and separating MORIAH or the Temple ridge from the city, while a deep and wide valley (the Tyropœon), running east to join this trench, separated the upper city from the smaller and lower knoll to the north, called Millo in the Old Testament, and Akra by Greek writers.

Jerusalem is first mentioned under that name in the Book of Joshua, and the Tel el-Amarna tablets include six letters from its Amorite king to Egypt, about 1400 B.C. The name is there spelt Uru-Salim ("city of peace"). It is also named in Sennacherib's record of 702 B.C.

The City of David included both the upper city and Millo, and was surrounded by a wall built by David and Solomon. The name Zion (or Sion), a poetical term for Jerusalem, was in the Greek age specially used of the Temple Hill. The priests' quarter grew up on Ophel, south of the Temple. The walls of the city were extended by Jotham and Manasseh to include this suburb and the Temple (2 Chr. 27. 3; 33. 14).

A large rock-cut tank at the north-west corner of the upper city, called in later times the pool Amygdalon ("of the tower"), seems to be the Upper Pool of Hezekiah's time (Isa. 36. 2). The pool or spring of Gihon, in the Kidron Valley under Ophel, was the same as En-Rogel ("spring of the water channel"), and Hezekiah made from it a rock aqueduct-tunnel through the hill to Siloam, near the mouth of the Tyropœon. On the rock near the mouth of this aqueduct an inscription is found which is the only true Hebrew text as yet known:—

The Siloam Inscription.

(From a Photograph of an Impression traced in 1881, showing the Phœnician character. About 700 B.C.)

The inscription, which was cut on the wall of the conduit which fed the Pool of Siloam, states that the excavators began to work at the ends and met in the middle of the tunnel. When as yet the two bodies of miners were separated by a distance of three cubits, they heard each other's voices; they hewed away "pickaxe against pickaxe," and the waters flowed from the spring to the pool, a distance of one thousand two hundred cubits (2 Kings 20. 20; 2 Chr. 32. 30). This is the oldest extant Hebrew record of the kind. It was discovered by a boy wading in the conduit in 1880.

2 "The axe each to his fellow, and three cubits

5 "the waters from the spring to the pool, a

6 "cubit was the height of the rock . . ."

The tunnel as measured is about 1,200 cubits of 16 inches in length.

Gihon is probably the Bethesda of the New Testament. Opposite Gihon is the rock of Zoheleth, on the east side of the Kidron gorge. The city remained unchanged from the time of Jotham till its destruction by Nebuchadrezzar in 586 B.C. The walls were rebuilt by Nehemiah on the old line; but in a later age a new wall was built on the north side of the upper city, dividing off the Greek fortress on Akra, and running to the Temple bridge.

There were thus in the time of Christ two lines of wall, one all round Jerusalem, and one dividing it into two quarters. The remains of these walls have been traced on the west, south, and east. The old line crossed the Tyropœon, leaving Siloam outside the city. Agrippa's later wall, to protect the "New City" farther north, did not then exist. The chief buildings of that age included Herod's palace in the north-west corner and the palace of the Asmonæans at the north-east corner of the upper city; the Xystus or gymnasium in the valley under the latter; and the fortress of Antonia, which commanded the Temple at the north-east corner of the north wall.

The TEMPLE itself stood on the highest part of the ridge—now occupied by the Dome of the Rock—with courts on the flat slopes. The outer court was roughly a square of 1,000 feet side. The Court of Israel, and inner Court of the Priests, lay east of the holy house, divided off by a balustrade with Greek texts—one of which has been found. It reads:—

"No stranger is to enter within the balustrade round the Temple and Court. Whoso is found will be guilty of his own death to follow."

The upper ramparts (except at the north-west corner), the holy house itself, the cloisters, and the Tyropœon bridge at the south-west angle, have been entirely destroyed, only the fallen arch and pier foundations of the last having been found by excavation.

There were four entrances on the west, two by bridges, two by gates on the lower valley level, all still extant in ruins, or with later restorations. On the south two outer gates (the Huldah Gates) led from Ophel; the western, which was double, retains its great pillars and flat domes with the semi-Greek ornament of Herod's time; the eastern was triple, and exists as restored by Justinian. The "Golden Gate," near the north-east corner of the outer wall, also belongs, as at present existing, to Justinian's age. On the north the Gate Tadi, leading to Antonia, was reached by a rock-cut passage, still existing, but converted into a tank by a cross wall.

The Temple was supplied with water by numerous rock-cut reservoirs, and by Pilate's aqueduct from Bethlehem. Over the "Stone of Foundation," a natural rock, projecting under the floor of the Holy of Holies, the present Dome of the Rock was built in 688 A.D.

CALVARY or GOLGOTHA.—North of the city, just outside the present Damascus Gate, is the remarkable knoll with the cave known as "Jeremiah's Grotto." This is most probably the true site of Calvary or Golgotha ("the place of the skull"), which was near Jerusalem (John 19. 17–20), but without the gate (Heb. 13. 12). A Jewish rock-cut tomb has been found immediately west of the knoll.

The discovery of the ancient wall, immediately west of the pool Amygdalon, on the narrow neck of high ground between the heads of the Hinnom and Tyropœon valleys, and running for some distance north, renders it improbable that the rocky knoll, now shown in the cathedral within modern Jerusalem, can be the true site of Calvary, or the tomb near it the true Holy Sepulchre. The second wall seems to have included these sites, which have been revered since they were fixed on by Constantine in the fourth century A.D., when all memory of the true sites appears—according to Eusebius—to have been lost. The suburbs of Jerusalem extended far beyond this knoll of Akra, and probably existed at the time of the Crucifixion; but it has not as yet been found possible to trace the line of the second wall on the north side.

Among monuments of the Herodian and Roman age may be mentioned the tomb of the kings of Adiabene (commonly called "Tomb of the Kings") on the north; the tomb of Herod's family, recently found west of the Hinnom Valley; the tomb of Ananus on the south side of the lower Hinnom ravine near its junction with the Kidron; and the tomb of the Bene Hezir priests (called "Tomb of St. James") on the east side of the Kidron, with other monuments of the same period (called "Tomb of Absalom" and "Tomb of Zechariah"), in a debased Greek style.

The site of ACELDAMA ("the field of blood," or "potter's field") is traditionally shown at a vault on the hill south of the Hinnom Valley. The site of Tophet is also uncertain, but lay in the lower Kidron. The exact site of Gethsemane is also doubtful. The tomb of the kings of Israel and Judah was still known about 30 A.D. (Acts 2. 29), and may possibly be represented by the ancient sepulchre in the west wall of the Holy Sepulchre Cathedral; but other kings were buried on Ophel near the Royal Palace and King's Gardens.

Jerusalem is now a town of some 50,000 inhabitants, with ancient mediæval walls. The traditional sites, as a rule, have no authority. The results of excavation have settled the limits of the Temple area, and the course of the old walls.

MORIAH is supposed to have been the scene of Abraham's intended sacrifice of Isaac (Gen. 22. 2–4, 14), and Jerusalem has been thought to be the Salem of Melchizedek (Gen. 14. 18). The antiquity of the name Jerusalem has only of late been confirmed by monumental notices as already stated.

JESUS [jē'sŭs], LIFE OF, AND HARMONY OF THE GOSPELS. About five years before the beginning of the Christian era, an aged priest named Zacharias was burning incense in the Temple when the angel Gabriel appeared and told him that a son would be born to him, who, being filled with the Holy Ghost, should go before the Lord in the spirit and power of Elias, and prepare a people for Him.

Gabriel's Messages. B.C. 6. Nov. Lu. 1. 11–17.

Some months later, the angel announced to a maiden in Nazareth that, by the power of the Highest, she should bear a son, whose name should be called Jesus, "the Son of God." Mary, nothing doubting, visited her cousin, Elisabeth, wife of Zacharias, in the hill country of Judæa. There the two women rejoiced together, Mary magnifying God in a song of wonderful elevation, dignity, and beauty.

B.C. 6. May. Lu. 1. 26–38.

John, born in the year 5 B.C., thoroughly trained in boyhood by his father Zacharias, spent the years of early manhood in the desert. But his function was clearly indicated in the Song of Zacharias at his birth. He should be "called the prophet of the Highest:" for he should "go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways."

Birth of John the Baptist. B.C. 5. Aug. Lu. 1. 57–66.

Herod the Great ruled in Palestine, holding his sceptre at the will of the Emperor Augustus. An Idumæan by birth, cruel and crafty by nature, the Jews hated him. But behind the standards of Herod blazed the splendors of the Roman eagles. And a general registration of the inhabitants of the empire being ordered, it took effect throughout the dominions of Herod.

B.C. 4. Mt. 2. 1. Lu. 2. 1.

If there be any honor or advantage therein, Orientals carefully guard their citizenship in the place of their birth. A Christian born in Nazareth, wherever he may live, will proudly maintain his standing in the city of his Saviour's boyhood, and rejoice in the name of Nasrâny, "a Nazarine." Joseph, a carpenter in Nazareth, was a native of Bethlehem, betrothed to Mary. Descended from the royal house of Israel, he kept his name on the roll of that "royal city;" therefore, for registration, to Bethlehem he must go.

"guest-chamber," thankful at last to share the shelter provided for the beasts of burden. The Oriental "inn" or khân is in form a hollow square, with arches round the sides within, and over these a series of rooms, approached by a stone stair. The rooms are for travellers, the arches for their animals.

B.C. 4.

The "inn" here, however, may have been the "guest-chamber" in the house of a friend of Joseph. The "guest-chamber" is somewhat higher than the rest of the house, which in the villages is used indiscriminately as kitchen and cattle shelter. The family often occupy a corner in the lower part, that visitors may be free. Houses are frequently built over caves in the limestone rock, which are used as grain stores and stables. An old tradition says that in such a cave, the travellers from Nazareth found rest.

Birth of Jesus. Lu. 2. 7.

The flocks gathered together before sunset lay in the fields, waiting the return of dawn, guarded by their shepherds. Suddenly the voice of an angel, ringing over the wilderness announcing the birth and birthplace of Messiah, startled the shepherds. The glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid. "And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying,

Angels and Shepherds. Lu. 2. 8–20.

> 'Glory to God in the highest,
> And on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased.'"

Guided by this vision and message, the shepherds came to Bethlehem, and "found both Mary and Joseph, and the babe lying in the manger." The "manger," or midhwad, a trough-like hollow on the edge of the raised floor of the "khan," is a convenient and safe place for the little ones.

The Child Jesus. Lu. 2. 12.

April.

Lu. 2. 21–38.

Circumcised the eighth day, and thirty-two days later presented in the Temple, with the humble offering permitted to the poor, Jesus was recognized by the aged Simeon as the Consolation of Israel, "the Lord's Christ," his testimony being corroborated by the prophetess Anna.

The Wise Men.

Mt. 2. 1–12.

From "the east" came "wise men" seeking one born "King of the Jews," whose star they had seen and followed. Their inquiry for Him in Jerusalem aroused the suspicious fears of Herod. Directed to Bethlehem, they came "where the young child was," and, with the stately salaams of the Orient, presented gold, frankincense, and myrrh—kingly gifts, in homage to one born to rule.

Herod wished them to tell him when they found the Prince; but, warned to avoid the king, they return by another way to their mysterious home, and are lost to view for ever.

"Mocked" by the wise men, Herod "was exceeding wroth." He might not find the object of his fear, but he might destroy Him. The limit of age upwards was fixed by the appearance of the star, two years before. It has been too common from of old for the Oriental despot to slay every possible aspirant to his throne. To make sure of his aim, Herod sent forth, and slew all the male children in Bethlehem, from two years old and under.

Massacre and Flight.

Mt. 2. 13–18.

"A voice was heard in Ramah,
Weeping and great mourning,
Rachel weeping for her children;
And she would not be comforted, because they are not."

Taking Mary and Jesus with him, under the friendly gloom of night, Joseph had made his escape from Bethlehem. Hurrying down through the hill country, he may have joined, in the Philistine plain, a merchant caravan bound for Egypt.

Return to Nazareth.

Mt. 2. 19–23.
Lu. 2. 39.

After Herod's death the holy family returned, not to Bethlehem, from fear of Archelaus, the new king, but to the village of Nazareth.

NAZARETH.

Nazareth.

Just before they descend in precipitous cliffs upon the plain of Esdraelon, a little hollow is formed among the lower hills of Galilee, on the N.W. slopes of which lies the village of Nazareth. The houses, of white limestone, rise from the midst of greenery—hedges of cactus, fruit trees, olives, and vineyards. Inhabited largely by Christians, it is one of the cleanest and prettiest towns in Palestine. Of the many hills around it, one, higher than the rest, to the north, is climbed by every boy. What heart-stirring memories are associated with the scenes all visible from its summit: Acre, Carmel, Esdraelon, Negiddo, the mountains of Samaria, Gilboa, Little Hermon, Tabor, the edge of the Bashan and Gilead plateau beyond Jordan, Gathhepher, Sepphoris, the breezy uplands of Zebulun and Naphtali, and far away in the north-eastern sky the snowy brows of the mighty Hermon!

A freer spirit prevailed in Galilee than in priest-ridden Judæa. The southerns despised the rude northmen, and made sport of their uncouth manners and speech; but in days of stress the sturdy peasant farmers of Galilee formed the backbone of the Jewish armies. Passing troops, imperial messengers, the splendid embassies of Rome, the great merchant caravans, were all avenues of communion with a life larger and more expansive than their own. In such surroundings Jesus grew up; as also eleven of His apostles. Judas only was a Judæan.

Lu. 2. 40, 52.

Childhood of Jesus.

Taught at home and in the village school, Jesus at five would begin to read the Scriptures; at ten to study the Law; at thirteen He would be "bound to the commandments," and become a member of the congregation. He may have learned some Greek and Latin, but He spoke Aramaic. Latin was the language of the conquerors, Greek was spoken by the cultured, and Aramaic by the common people; just as now Turkish, French, and Arabic are the languages of conquerors, of diplomatic and educated circles, and of the common people respectively.

Visit to Jerusalem. A.D. 8. Lu. 2. 41, 42. In the Temple. Lu. 2. 44–47.

At twelve He for the first time went to the Passover at Jerusalem. Absorbed in discourse with the doctors of Israel, "both hearing them, and asking them questions," regarding the faith and hopes of Israel.

Pilgrims returning northward from Jerusalem usually start late in the day, and El-Bireh, some nine miles distant, near Bethel, is a common halting-place the first night. Old tradition says that here Joseph and Mary missed Jesus. With what fear and "sorrow" they retraced their steps in search of Him, while they thought of the beasts of prey and of the fierce men of blood who infested the country! When at last he was found in the Temple, His first recorded words hint that they had forgotten much of a still recent past, which might well have haunted every thought of theirs for ever: "Wist ye not that I must be in my Father's house?"

Youth in Nazareth. Lu. 2. 51.

Years of obscurity in Nazareth followed, wherein He learned to shape the implements required by the rude husbandry of the day—the plough, the yoke, the "tribulum," the "fan." In the still evenings that fall over these uplands, or in the earlier watches, before the brightening east had kindled the splendours on Great Hermon, we can fancy Him wandering among sequestered vales, or along these rocky hills, conversing with the great Spirit that in all things spake to Him. With the exception of this one fragment of incident—the visit to Jerusalem and the Temple in His twelfth year—the canonical Gospels are silent as to the history of Jesus from the return to Nazareth to His thirtieth year. This long period, especially the childhood of Jesus, in the Apocryphal gospels is crowded with silly fables, largely concerned with the working of miracles. This may be the reason why John declares so emphatically that the miracle at Cana was the first that Jesus performed. The inspired record passes over this period by saying that Jesus "increased in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man."

John the Baptist. A.D. 27. Mt. 3. 1–17. Mk. 1. 2–11. Lu. 3. 2–22. Jo. 1. 15–36.

When Jesus was about thirty years of age, the country was startled by an Elijah-like prophet from the southern deserts. Rough in aspect, clad in the garb of the wilderness, nurtured on its scanty fare, his stern soul braced by years of solitary communion with God, passionately earnest, with fiery directness of speech, he shook the land to the core with his preaching of repentance. A strangely-mingled company surrounded him on the Jordan. Wild tribesmen from Bashan, shepherds from the glens of Gilead, peasants from the rich vales westward, fishermen from Galilee, merchant, money-changer, tax-gatherer, soldier, Pharisee and priest, were there, drawn by the irresistible attractions of "a man sent from God," receiving the baptism of John.

Baptism of Jesus. Mt. 3. 13–17. Mk. 1. 9–11. Lu. 3. 21, 22. Jo. 1. 29–36.

At the very height of his fame John suddenly lifted his hand, directing every eye, and exclaimed, "Behold the Lamb of God." Jesus had come, and had been baptized of John, who, recognizing his Master, at once made way for Him; with heroic self-effacement thenceforth taking the second place. He who came to the river as "the carpenter" ascended the bank as Messiah, and the voice of God from heaven proclaimed Him His beloved Son.

The Temptation. Mt. 4. 1–11. Mk. 1. 12, 13. Lu. 4. 1–13.

Westward from Jericho Jebel Karantal throws its forbidding height against the sky, overlooking the patch of greenery at its base and the wide level wastes of the Dead Sea plains. These dreary uplands have never known inhabitants save the eremites who have dwelt at intervals in its caves. Haunt of fierce beasts and birds of prey, this lonely wilderness has long been identified with the scene of the temptation. Its stones, resembling in shape the rough bread of the country, may have suggested the form of the first temptation.

From the mountain top you can see the tower on the crest of Olivet. Just beyond this, on the brow of Moriah, stood the sanctuary of His people. There the hope had long been cherished that the Messiah, the Lord, would come suddenly to His temple. From the sunny skies a vision of brightness and power should descend, and startle the amazed worshippers into swift recognition of their promised Deliverer. Why not thus descend in their midst, and secure at once what must otherwise be sought through pain and weariness? Because the promise of upholding "in all His ways" could not apply if He capriciously went out of His way to tempt God. He was not to gratify the Jewish sign seekers.

Again, Jesus aims at world-wide dominion. From this mount, Moses-like, He viewed His promised land. He also saw a vision of that sorrowful way to Gethsemane, Calvary, the tomb; the centuries of toil and battle, suffering and martyrdom in store for His Church in its militant state. Why not with His supernatural genius and power take command of the armies of Israel? To-morrow the world would lie humbled and submissive at His feet, and He might sway its destinies at will. But how dearly were the triumphs bought!—at the price of homage to the god of this world, the sworn enemy of God and man. The dream of earthly glory is thrust aside; the path of obedience, suffering, and shame is His final and irrevocable choice.

First Disciples. Jo. 1. 37–51.

Jesus returned to the scene of His baptism, where John continued to labor. Some of the Baptist's disciples, directed by his testimony, followed Jesus. Andrew and "another," possibly John, were soon joined by Peter, Philip, and Nathanael. "We have found the Messias," said Andrew to Simon. Every Israelite knew what that meant.

The Messiah.

The Messiah represented the Jewish hope, as El-Hâdy does that of the Druze, and El-Mahdy that of Islâm, both being from the same root, meaning "to guide," and signifying "the well-directed One." Even so, but with greater eagerness, did Israel hope for "the Anointed's" coming. Having once met Him, ordinary avocations might be resumed for a time; but His final call found them ready to leave all and follow Him.

Cana of Galilee. Jo. 2. 1–12.

To Nazareth was an easy three days' journey: past Shiloh or Shechem and Engannim if the hill road were taken, or following the valley by way of Bethshean and up the vale of Jezreel, Nazareth might be reached early on the third day. Cana was about seven miles distant on the north edge of the plain of Asochis, and could easily be reached in time for the marriage festivities in the evening, to which He had been invited. The name Kânâ el-Jelîl may still be heard on native lips; it is the exact Arabic equivalent of Κανὰ τῆς Γαλιλαίας, our "Cana of Galilee." It is now an utter ruin; near by are rock-cut tombs; ancient cisterns have been found, but no spring. The old Hebrew name Kanah ("the reedy") suits this place, which overlooks the marshy, reedy plain. It does not at all fit Kefr Kennah, which has long claimed the honour, on the south border of the plain, three miles from Nazareth on the Tiberias road.

First Miracle.

In the Orient even a poor man may entertain a great company on the occasion of a marriage. Failure of viands, which need not be expensive, would disgrace the host. From this shame Jesus saved His friends. The wine gave out, and He changed the water in the pots to excellent wine.

Cleansing of the Temple. April. Jo. 2. 13–25.

A brief visit, perhaps His first, paid to Capernaum, Jesus went up to the Passover at Jerusalem. Dealers in cattle and doves for sacrifice, and men who, at exorbitant rates, changed the current money of the provinces for the shekels of the sanctuary, in which the Temple dues were paid, pursued their nefarious traffic within the court of the Temple itself. Deeply resenting this slight upon His Father's house, He drove out the dealers and cattle.

Their methods are pursued to-day in the holy places; the devotional feelings of men being "exploited" for material gain.

Nicodemus. Jo. 3. 1–21.

Fearing the hatred of the Jews against free inquiry in religious matters, Nicodemus came to Jesus by night. He learned the condition of entrance into the kingdom of God —viz. the new birth; and also the truth, that God loves Gentiles as well as Jews, for He "loves the world." At the very outset is set forth the message of Redemption and victory over sin through the cross, of which the brazen serpent was a symbol.

Baptizing Disciples. Jo. 3. 22–25.

Descending again into the river country, Jesus also, by His disciples, received men into fellowship through baptism. Greater numbers gathered to Him than to John; this gave a new opportunity to that brave, true man for spontaneous witness to his great Successor. "He must increase, but I must decrease"—an eternal rebuke to the spirit of professional jealousy. John's public work, indeed, was nearly done. In the fearless spirit of his great prototype he denounced the illegal marriage of Antipas, and speedily found himself in prison, hated by a wicked and unscrupulous woman, who would be satisfied with nothing but his blood.

Dec.

Woman at Jacob's Well. Jo. 4. 1–42.

JACOB'S WELL. John 4. 6.

He sat to rest, while His disciples crossed the vale to Sychar to buy food. Here occurred the memorable interview with the Samaritan woman, Jesus revealing His divine mission to those not only outside the pale of Judaism, but hated as mortal foes. The well is empty now. A house is built over it, and the surrounding land is planted as an orchard. Gerizim rears its frowning crags close by the well, crowned by the ruins of Justinian's fortress.

The Samaritans.

Near these are the holy places of the Samaritans. They claim that Gerizim is the most ancient sanctuary in the land; that they, not the Jews, are the true custodians of the Law of Moses. The hatred of Jew and Samaritan was about the most perfect thing of its kind the world has ever seen. The Samaritan temple was destroyed by John Hyrcanus. The Samaritans were in part avenged when one crept into the Temple at Jerusalem on Passover night, and polluted it with human bones. Hushed are the priests' voices on Moriah; the smoke of sacrifice ascends no more; but on the bleak heights of Gerizim the yearly sacrifice is offered still, and the prayers are chanted that for millenniums have echoed along the rocky summit.

A.D. 28. April. In Galilee. Jo. 4. 4–54. Jo. 5. 1–15. Jo. 5. 16–47.

In Galilee Jesus was cordially received by the people, and His fame was confirmed by His healing from Cana the king's officer's son in Capernaum. Little is recorded of His work until we find Him again at the feast of the Passover. The pool of Bethesda, fed by an intermittent spring, was frequented by sick folk, who thought its waters had healing virtues. One Sabbath day Jesus healed a man who had long waited in vain for relief. He was at once charged with breaking the Sabbath. In His reply He said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work;" wherein the Jews rightly understood Him to claim equality with God. The charge of blasphemy, then first raised, was never lost sight of, and on this, according to Jewish law, He was finally condemned.

Rejection in Nazareth. Lu. 4. 16–30.

Again Jesus journeyed northward, and went to the city of his boyhood. Preaching in the synagogue, He applied the prophecy of Isaiah (61) to Himself, and charmed His old friends, but His stern reproof of their unbelief so enraged them that they sought to hurl Him over a precipice on the hillside, possibly that behind the present Maronite church. Passing through their midst He escaped. The Jews drove Him forth from Nazareth: to-day no Jew finds a home there.

By the Sea of Galilee.

Thenceforward only in Capernaum, "His own city," is Jesus ever described as being "at home." West, south, and east of the Sea of Galilee stood such splendid cities as Tiberias and Gadara, where paganism dwelt in pride. Northward lay the Jewish towns Chorazin, Bethsaida, Capernaum; and Jesus "dwelt among His own people." An indescribable charm haunts all the shores of Galilee, girt round by lofty hills, now lashed to fury by the sudden tempest, anon reflecting in calm depths the flaming splendors of Hermon at morn or eve.

To the north-west the mountains retire from the beach, leaving an almost crescent-shaped plain between them and the sea some three miles in length. This is the land of Gennesaret, once so fertile and beautiful that Josephus called it the "Ambition of Nature." The dark tents and lumbering camels of the Arab now dot the landscape. Patches are cultivated, but great rich breadths run wild are plentifully covered with thistle, thorn and brier.

Capernaum.

Capernaum was in or close by this plain. It was a customs station, held by a troop of soldiers, the residence of a king's officer. The very name is gone; nor can we distinguish its ruins among the blackened heaps that stud the shore.

Teaching and Miracles in Galilee.

Residing in Capernaum, Jesus taught and healed the sick throughout the district. Preaching in the open air was not uncommon, and the sea-shore was a favorite resort. Sometimes He sat in a boat a little way from the shore. There is many a gentle bay along the coast, with grassy banks sloping from the water's edge, forming a beautiful natural amphitheatre, where many hundreds could hear. Before Him were the implements of fisherman and peasant, from whose work He drew such wealth of illustration. Once after such a discourse He bade weary fishermen, who had vainly toiled all night, let down their net: it was filled to the breaking. Improving the occasion, when mind and heart were moved by this display, He called them to be "fishers of men."

Mt. 4. 12–25. Lu. 5. 1–11. Mk. 1. 16–42.

The scribes taught the Law, resting on the authority of the great masters of the past. The value of their utterances depended on their skill in tradition and precedent. Jesus spoke with divine authority. His "Verily I say unto you" bore within itself the authority of the Son who had come from the bosom of the Father.

The Demoniac. Mk 1. 23–26. Lu. 4. 33–36.

While teaching at Capernaum an extraordinary incident occurred. A man in the assembly, possessed of an unclean spirit, broke forth in cries, addressing Jesus by name and speaking of Him as "the Holy One of God,"—a truer testimony to Christ's holiness and power than most of those present were willing to give—and construed His coming as meaning destruction to the empire of Satan. At Christ's word, after a terrible paroxysm, from which, however, the man escaped unhurt, the demon was cast out. More than ever the people were "amazed" at the word which had such power. (Here, as elsewhere in the Gospels, the distinction between diseases, insanity, and demoniacal possession is clearly maintained.)

Healing the Sick. Mt. 8. 14, 15. Mk. 1. 29–32. Lu. 4. 38, 39.

Returning to Capernaum, He healed Peter's wife's mother, whom He found tossing in the miserable fever-chill too well known from of old to the dwellers in Palestine. The concourse round the door you may see when the medical missionary goes abroad in Galilee to-day. From lonely upland village, from dark-spreading encampment in plain and valley, they bring their sick and suffering ones. The Physician plies His gracious task, and words of truth are spoken to the waiting people. Thus from "every town in Galilee, Judæa, and Jerusalem" they came. Even the leper, doomed to perpetual ostracism, to a lonely and weary death, gathered fresh courage in Jesus' presence. Nor was his appeal in vain. Observe the note of accuracy: "Judæa and Jerusalem." In Jerusalem centred the interest and pride of the nation. Judæa was divided into "the mountain," "the Shephelah," and "the valley," "Jerusalem" being added as a separate district.

Mk. 3. 7, 8. Lu. 6. 17. Mt. 8. 2–5. Mk. 1. 40. Lu. 5. 12.

Mk. 1. 45. Lu. 5. 16. Mt. 9. 1–8. Mk. 2. 1–12. Lu. 5. 18–26.

Jesus withdrew for rest, probably to some secluded vale of Naphtali; but the many-voiced cry of human need soon called Him forth again. Hemmed in by anxious crowds, most likely in the liwan, or open-fronted reception room of a house, four men, carrying a palsied comrade, climbed to the roof, and breaking it up, let down the mattress and the man before Him. Their faith commanded immediate help. To the scandal of the Pharisees He said, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." Easy to say, this might only be blasphemy. But in proof of His authority, to the confusion of His critics, at His word the helpless man took up his bed and walked out before them all.

Objects of universal hatred and contempt to the pious and patriotic in Israel were the men who farmed and collected the imperial taxes. They were given up as lost—abandoned sternly to their fate. Jesus speaks to Matthew (or Levi), bids him leave his disreputable work, and follow Him. Used only to black looks and contemptuous sneers, Matthew heard the kindly word with joyful surprise. He must by this time have seen and heard much of Jesus. Convinced of His Messiahship, Matthew the publican now became Matthew the apostle. Christ's answer to cavillers at His care for outcasts was that He "came to call sinners to repentance."

Mt. 9. 9–17. Mk. 2. 13–22. Lu. 5. 27–39.

The Sabbath.

The Sabbath law, as interpreted by the doctors, with their innumerable requirements and restrictions, had changed the Sabbath from "a delight" to a day of anxiety and mental strain. Methods had to be devised for the relief of weary humanity. Observance of these rules came to be thought the main end of life; but it was taught that mere technical observance was enough, and this often meant a real breach. Jesus scorned these pleas of perverse ingenuity. Walking through the fields, His disciples plucked ears of corn, rubbed off the chaff between their hands, and ate. They were held formally guilty of reaping and of threshing, and were at once attacked by the legalists. In reply, Jesus quoted Old Testament incidents to prove that the Pharisees were ignorant even of the Old Testament spirit of Sabbath legislation. Going beyond this, He proceeded to announce Himself as Lord of the Sabbath, who could abrogate the law Himself had given to ancient Israel. Immediately He restored a man's withered hand, but by this new demonstration of His authority only inflamed to "madness" the minds of His adversaries.

The Twelve chosen. Mt. 10. 2–4. Mk. 3. 13–19. Lu. 6. 13–16.

Having healed multitudes of sick people on the sea-shore, He withdrew to a mountain and spent the night in prayer. In the morning He chose twelve men to be His close companions. Several pairs having the same names were, according to Eastern custom, distinguished by epithets descriptive of personal characteristics or of origin—for example, Simon Peter and Simon the Canaanite, Judas, James's brother, and Judas, the man of Kerioth. Then followed the declaration of the great principles of the kingdom, reported in Mat. 5-7.

The traditional "Mount of Beatitudes," a double-crested hill four miles west of Tiberias, seems too far from the Sea of Galilee, and too difficult of access from that side. Possibly, too, it was a fortress in Jesus' time. It commands one of the fairest prospects in Palestine, grassy slopes falling away to westward, the scene of the Crusaders' last crushing defeat by Saladin; Tabor, presiding over the broad terraces in which the land lets itself down towards the sea; the fertile plains of Hattîn; the wild gorge of Wadyel-Haman, and through its rocky jaws the sweet shores of Gennesaret, the breezy uplands of Naphtali; and away to the northeast the black hills of Jaulan, culminating in the white mass of the mighty Hermon. But there are many mountains overlooking the sea which might well have served the Master's use.

Its Teaching.

This great sermon declares and illustrates the inward and spiritual character of religious life and experience, emphasizing the supreme value of love. There was much against ordinary ideas and customs —e.g. "Love your enemies." The dearest duty of the Oriental has ever been to hate his enemy, to avenge every insult and injury. Now Jesus shows that even he who hates anyone is guilty of murder. In many other ways this greatest Law sermon ever preached illustrates the holiness of God's will. Note, again, touches of local color: "City set on a hill," "pray standing in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets," "the fowls of the air," "the lilies of the field," etc.

Mission of the Twelve.

The sermon ended, the Twelve went out on their first mission, to Israel only. The hospitality of the land made encumbering provisions unnecessary, while their gifts of healing would everywhere secure them welcome. Then came elders from Capernaum interceding for the centurion's servant who was sick. The centurion had endeared himself to the Jews by building them a synagogue. It had been a day of manifold and exhausting labors for Jesus. A walk of perhaps seven miles brought Him back to Capernaum, the crowds accompanying. Yet no sooner, on His return, does He hear the centurion's appeal for help than His love replies, "I will come and heal him." The centurion felt he was not worthy that Jesus should come under his roof; but let Jesus speak the word only, and his servant would be healed. "I have not found such faith," Jesus said, "no, not in Israel." The word was spoken, and, on the return of the centurion's messengers, the servant was found healed.

Leaving Capernaum, Jesus climbed the mountain westward, crossed the plain which runs up to the foot of NAIN. Luke 7. 11.

Tabor, passed through the oak groves under the mountain, and issued on the edge of Esdraelon. A little vale divides Tabor from Little Hermon; on the northwest shoulder of the latter lay the city of Nain, "the fair," whither He was bound. It commands a fine view of the great plain and its historic surroundings.

Endor lies eastward, and Shunem, a mile to the southwest, nestles sweetly among her orchards. The place is now ruinous. A large stone, Hajeret Yesu'a, "the stone of Jesus," lies near, on which it is said He rested. Coming near, He met a funeral procession.

The mind of the East will tolerate no burying within the city. The body was carried openly on a bier. This carrying is reckoned a peculiarly pious and meritorious work. In Judæa the professional mourners, with pipe and drum making melancholy music, came first. In Galilee first in the procession were the women, relatives, and friends of the deceased. The desolate widow, bereaved of her only son, moved the Saviour's compassion. Staying the procession, He called the young man back to life, and "gave him to his mother."

Tribute to John.

Mt. 11. 2-19. Lu. 7. 18-35.

At this time the disciples of John began to waver in their faith. John sends them to Jesus that they might learn that Jesus was indeed the Messiah. Jesus paid a great tribute to the Baptist's character and work. He was no tall reed, with gracefully bending head, sensitive to the gentlest breath. No vision of pampered royalty attracted the crowds to the desert, but a prophet, and "more than a prophet." None greater had been born of woman. Then, by bidding John's disciples to observe His works, the healing of the blind, the deaf, and the lame, the raising of the dead, and the preaching of the Gospel, He teaches them that Messiah was indeed come.

Mt. 11. 20-24. Lu. 10. 13-16.

The flood of outward popularity did not deceive Jesus. The cities in which His greatest works were wrought, remained impenitent at heart. Speaking solemn words of doom, He contrasted them unfavorably with the wicked cities of the ancient world, Tyre and Sidon, nay, even with Sodom and Gomorrah. What is Chorazin now?

A blackened ruin on a bleak hill-top, overlooking a scene of utter desolation. And Bethsaida? A place for the stretching of nets by the lonely shore. And Capernaum—populous, prosperous, proud Capernaum? So completely has time wiped her away that we know not even where she stood.

In Gennesaret and Gergesa. Lu. 8. 1–3. Mt. 12. 22–46. Mk. 3. 22–31.

After a short preaching tour in Galilee, He returned to Capernaum. Having healed a dumb man, His power was ascribed to Beelzebub. Here is the seed of that crop of insults and blasphemies with which the Jews of old wrote of Jesus. His answer to them was complete. If demons could be cast out only by the prince of devils, their own sons, exorcists, stood condemned of traffic with hell. He refused to gratify curiosity by signs, when the Scriptures afforded full evidence of His claims. His own relatives also doubted, and wished to restrain Him. This led Him to indicate those who heard the Word of God and obeyed, as standing to Him in a relation of spiritual kinship more close than any tie of blood and family.

Mt. 13. 1–47. Mk. 4. 1–34. Lu. 8. 4–16.

His time was short; He had much to do and to teach; He would not be hindered. Entering a boat, He addressed the multitudes in a series of striking parables, drawn from the scenes around them: the sower, the wheat and tares, the grain of mustard seed, the leaven, the hidden treasure, the pearl of great price, and the drag-net.

Fishing Boat (On the Sea of Galilee).

Mt. 8. 24–27. Mk. 4. 37–41. Lu. 8. 23–25.

Wearied with His long effort, He slept in the boat as the disciples rowed eastward. A fearful storm broke over the lake, lashing it to fury in a moment. The seamen knew their danger. At their appeal the Sleeper arose and with a word laid the billows to rest.

Mt. 8. 28–34. Mk. 5. 1–15. Lu. 8. 27–35.

The lands of Gergesa, whither they were bound, were included in the district of Gadara, the city on the hill-top to the southeast. The country was startled by the healing of two fierce demoniacs, who dwelt among the tombs, and by the destruction of the swine that grazed on these uplands. The miracle furnishes manifest proof of the reality of Satanic possession, as distinguished from lunacy or epilepsy. However, with fatal shortsightedness, the owners of the swine besought Jesus to depart, and He recrossed the sea.

Mt. 9. 18–33. Mk. 5. 22–43. Lu. 8. 41–56.

His return was marked by raising to life the daughter of Jairus, and healing the woman with the issue of blood, who, true to the abiding custom in the Orient, having spent all her living upon "quacks," was left to poverty and despair. A circuit through Galilee brought Him again to the scenes of His boyhood. Received with cold unbelief, He turned His back on Nazareth forever.

Martyrdom of John. Mt. 14. 1–12. Mk. 6. 14–29. Lu. 9. 7.

Meantime Herod Antipas was troubled. He had cast John into prison. Josephus says he was imprisoned in Machærus, the gloomy fortress east of the Dead Sea. His account is incoherent. Herod would hardly send a prisoner to a keep already in the hands of his sworn foe. At a birthday feast given to his Galilæan nobles, Herod, fascinated by the dancing of his false wife's daughter, weakly yielded to her demand for John Baptist's head. The most convenient place for this feast, as also for the imprisonment of John, was the Golden House at Tiberias, where on a hill overlooking the sea its ruin is still known as Kasr Bint el-Melek, "Palace of the king's daughter." The fame of Jesus stirred with guilty fears the conscience of Antipas. He thought the murdered Baptist had come back to avenge his innocent death.

Feeding the Multitudes. Mt. 14. 13–21. Mk. 6. 30–44. Lu. 9. 12–17.

Returning from their mission, the Twelve went with Jesus to a "desert place" near Bethsaida Julias. "Desert" here corresponds to the Arabic bariyeh, the uncultivated grazing land beyond the tilled soil which surrounds the villages, where grass often abounds. Followed by multitudes, He taught and healed them, and at evening miraculously fed them with five loaves and two fishes.

Jo. 6. 1–13. Mt. 14. 25. Mk. 6. 48. Jo. 6. 19.

The crowds gone, the disciples started by boat for Bethsaida, and Jesus ascended a mountain to pray. As night fell, a great storm, apparently issuing from the valleys westward, burst over the lake, and the disciples, toiling in rowing, made no progress. Jesus approached, walking on the water. They were afraid; but His voice reassured them, and Peter made his brave but disastrous attempt to meet Him on the water. Jesus entered the boat, and they were soon at land. The people who had been fed in the desert found Him in the morning near Capernaum. Then, hearing that His mission was not to furnish the bread which perishes, but the bread of life, many, disappointed, left Him. The Twelve whom He had chosen clave unto Him, Peter uttering for them all his great confession.

Walking on the Water. Mt. 14. 34. Jo. 6. 26–70.

From Tyre to Hermon. Mt. 15. 21–29. Mk. 7. 24–30.

Soon afterwards Jesus visited the Mediterranean seaboard, crossing the borders of Israel for the first and only time. Where Lebanon looks down upon the sea over a strip of fertile plain, the ancient cities of Tyre and Sidon stood boldly out upon the coast line. Sarepta from its rocky height southward suggested memories of the great Elijah. A Syrophenician woman here, by an act of victorious faith, obtained healing for her daughter, the blessing of Messiah already touching the Gentiles.

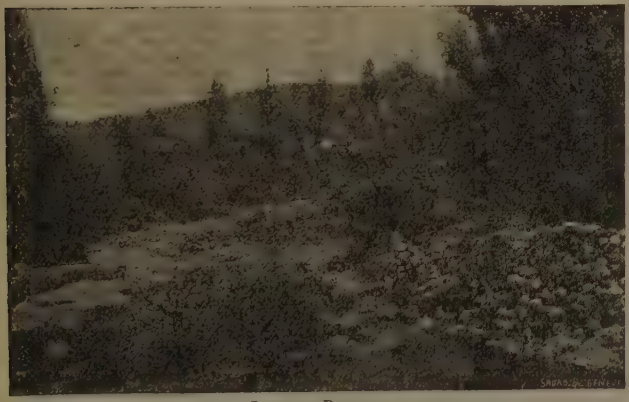
Mt. 15. 30, 31; Mk. 7. 31, 32. Mt. 15. 32-39. Mk. 8. 1-9.

Striking eastward across the hills, Jesus then visited the region of the "Ten Cities," which, with the exception of Scythopolis, lay east of Jordan. It was inhabited by a mixed population, in which the Greek element predominated. Here a deaf and dumb man was cured, and the second miraculous feeding of the multitudes took place.

On the Lake. Mt. 15. 39. Mk. 8. 10. Mt. 16. 1-12. Mk. 8. 11-21. Mk. 8. 22-26.

Thence He crossed the lake to Dalmanutha, probably at the modern 'Ain el-Fulyeh, on the shore south of Magdala. Refusing to gratify the curiosity of Pharisee and Sadducee with a sign, He again took boat. While they rowed, the disciples were warned against the doctrine of the Pharisees. Landing at Bethsaida—evidently Bethsaida Julias, northeast of the lake—a blind man was brought to Him and healed.

Cæsarea Philippi, whither Jesus



CÆSAREA PHILIPPI.

Cæsarea Philippi. Mt. 16. 13-81. Mk. 8. 27-30.

next journeyed, is the most romantically beautiful spot in Palestine. At the southern base of Great Hermon, it was of old called Paneas, from the god Pan, who had a sanctuary there. It was greatly enlarged and beautified by Herod the Great and Philip of Trachonitis, who called it Cæsarea Philippi. The fountain of the Jordan supplied abundant water, and its groves and gardens were a perennial delight. Little now remains to mark the splendors of that old city. In the modern Bâniâs, the ancient name has finally reasserted itself. In this district Peter's famous confession was made, "Thou art the Christ;" and the first clear intimation of His coming sufferings prompted Peter's presumptuous remonstrance, which met with such stern reproof.

Peter's Confession. Mt. 16. 21-28. Mk. 8. 31-38. John 9. 18-22.

Mount Hermon is emphatically the mountain in Palestine, presiding in lonely splendor over the whole land. No more fitting theatre for the manifestation of divine glory in the transfiguration could have been chosen than some lofty spur of this majestic range. Descending with the three who had accompanied Him to the heights, and having healed a demoniac lad, He repeats the announcement of His coming death; now, however, adding the assurance, which they did not understand, that He should "rise again the third day."

The Transfiguration. Lu. 9. 22, 27. Mt. 17. 1-8. Mk. 9. 2-8. Lu. 9. 28-36. Mt. 17. 14-23. Mk. 9. 14-27. Lu. 9. 37-42.

After His return to Capernaum, the tribute-money demanded was furnished in the mouth of a fish caught by Peter. Like true children of the Orient, the disciples longed for official recognition and distinction, and this independently of any special ability or fitness for promotion, simply by arbitrary favor of the monarch. Jesus taught that in His kingdom honor is reached only through humility, power through service. That He might be monarch Himself, He first became servant of all. They need not be jealous of men even who formed no part of their company. Gifts would be bestowed upon the faithful, by whatever name they might be called, and their works would be acknowledged.

Tribute-Money. Mt. 17. 27. Mt. 18. 1-25. Mk. 9. 33-43. Lu. 9. 46-48

From Galilee many went to Jerusalem for the Feast of Tabernacles. Jesus did not go at first, and speculation was rife as to the reason for His absence. About the middle of the feast He appeared, and taught publicly. Popular opinion was divided about Him. Some wished to put Him to death. The officers sent to arrest Him returned, exclaiming, "Never man spake like this man." A timely protest from Nicodemus prevented the Pharisees from condemning Him at once unheard. An attempt to entrap Him by presenting for judgment a woman taken in adultery, was turned to the accusers' confusion. In a subsequent discourse He claimed to be the "Light of the world," a figure suggested probably by the lighting up of the Temple at this feast. Jesus declared that natural descent from Abraham assured no man of God's favor, and He moved the Jews to fury by a claim to have existed before Abraham. His healing a beggar blind from his birth on the Sabbath day raised afresh the old Sabbath controversy.

Blind Beggar. Jo. 9. 1.

His tender love for the people is shown in the pictures in which He presents Himself as their Shepherd. With peculiar power they would appeal to the dwellers in the pastoral uplands of Judea. The characteristic figure in Galilee is the peasant farmer; in Judah it is the herdsman. Here Jesus is "the good Shepherd," who knows His sheep and is known of His. In the early morning the shepherd leads his sheep to the pastures he knows, in the recesses of the hills, where mayhap a spring makes music all the summer. They may mingle freely with others; but, hearing his call, they at once follow him. In the fierce heat of the day he will find a shelter for them, rudely built, perhaps, on the mountain side. When evening falls over the wilds, leading them homeward, he is ready, with staff and club, to venture his life for their safety against the fierce night-prowlers from cave and thicket, whose voices make night hideous.

Mission of the Seventy. Lu. 10. 1-24.

Seventy evangelists, endowed with miraculous powers, were about this time sent forth to preach. How long their mission lasted we know not; but they met with great success, and they came back jubilant, Jesus also being filled with joy and thankfulness.

Here we cannot follow with certainty the movements of Jesus. Between the Feast of Tabernacles and the Feast of the Dedication He may have visited Galilee. To this period belongs the parable of the good Samaritan, which, apart from its special teaching, illustrates the unsettled character of the district between Jerusalem and the Dead Sea, still the least safe part west of Jordan. The conduct and character of Pharisees, scribes, and lawyers received striking illustration and condemnation; so also the too common anxiety for earthly treasure, and forgetfulness of the heavenly. He charges men to faithfulness in handling earth's goods, as a stewardship from God. Contrary to popular ideas He urges that temporal misfortune is no proof of God's displeasure; that for all sinners, no matter how fortunate they may seem, escape from wrath lies only through repentance. Healing a long-afflicted woman in a certain synagogue on the Sabbath roused the indignation of the ruler, who by precipitate interference brought on himself the most scathing rebuke.

Dec. Feast of Dedication. Jo. 10. 22-40.

At the Feast of the Dedication, Jesus made a declaration of His oneness with God, which provoked the Jews to attack Him as a blasphemer; therefore He retired to the land beyond Jordan, near the scene of His baptism. Urged to flee thence lest Herod might slay Him, He showed how truly He had judged that monarch, describing him as a "fox." Not in Peræa but in Jerusalem He should die, for "it cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem;" and He burst into a heartbroken lament over the approaching doom of the city of His people's pride.

Lament over Jerusalem. Lu. 13. 23-33.

Seeking the Lost. Lu. 14. 1-24; 15. 1-32; 16. 1-31.

Invited to a feast in the house of a Pharisee, Jesus healed a dropsical man. The discourse which followed, closes with the parable of the Great Supper. This parable, while impressing the lesson that our tables should be spread for the destitute, at the same time had the deeper meaning of picturing the rejection of the Gospel by the Jews, and the call that would be given to the Gentiles to take their place. The door was wide open even for publicans and sinners, contemned by the "respectable" in Israel. But to Jesus these fallen ones were but as coins lost; as sheep wandered on the hills; as sons gone astray. To seek the coin, to track the sheep, how natural; how much more so to find the son, and restore him rejoicing to the father's bosom!

Bethany. A.D. 30. Jan. Jo. 11. 1-46.

Here came to Him the message from the home of Martha and Mary and Lazarus in Bethany, "Behold, he whom Thou lovest is sick." After two days, in spite of the danger to be faced, He set out to comfort His friends. Two days' journey brought Him to Bethany, the sweet village in a nook of Olivet, looking out from among its engirdling trees over the wilderness to the southeast, and the gorge of the Dead Sea, to the blue uplands of Moab beyond.

Lazarus Dead.

Lazarus was dead when the messenger reached Jesus, for now he had been in the grave four days. At the word of Jesus he that was dead came forth; the sorrow of his sisters was changed to ecstatic joy. This mighty miracle so moved the people in Jerusalem that His enemies felt that any moment He might be accepted as Messiah; now or never they must strike. Jesus therefore retired to the village of Ephraim, probably identical with Et-Taiyibeh, in the wild hill country northeast of Bethel, whence He soon set out on His last journey to Jerusalem. He seems to have passed through Samaria, Galilee, and Peræa, approaching the city finally by way of Jericho. On the way ten lepers were healed, and only one, a Samaritan, returned to thank Him.

Blesses Children.
Lu. 18. 15-23.

Mothers brought their children for His blessing. He welcomed them gladly, "for of such," He said, "is the kingdom of God." The story is told in four short verses, but these have given us an imperishable picture of Jesus the Children's Friend. In the next verses the evil of avarice is at once illustrated. The rich young ruler, whom Jesus loved, would not give his wealth even to buy the kingdom of God.

Last Journey to Jerusalem.

Coming across the level tracts from Jordan to Jericho, the great hills before them which they must climb to reach Jerusalem, Jesus again reminded His disciples of the fate that awaited Him there. Ambitions among them were not abashed, even in presence of this solemn declaration; they had not yet learned the lesson that greatness in His kingdom is not in lordship but service.

The miserable hovels of modern Eriha convey no suggestion of the beauty of the ancient city, at the foot of the mountains amid orchards and palms, with cultivated plains. As Jesus and His band approached, two blind men by the wayside claimed His compassion, and their eyes were opened. Passing through Jericho, the chief publican, Zacchæus, a man short of stature, climbed a sycamore tree to catch a glimpse of the Prophet who cared something for publicans. Jesus saw him, and by calling him and becoming his guest brought salvation to his house.

April.

Nearing Jerusalem the disciples felt they were on the eve of great events. Should the kingdom of God at once appear? The parable of the talents with its melancholy close repressed their vain hopes. In the city the enemies of Jesus were on the alert, devising means for His apprehension. He arrived in Bethany six days before the Feast of the Passover. In the house of Simon the leper, Mary anointed His head and feet with ointment. Many Jews walked out from Jerusalem to see Him and Lazarus. This was on the Sabbath evening.

From Bethany to Gethsemane. First day of Passion Week.

In the morning of the first day of the week came a momentary gleam as of victory. As He rode towards Jerusalem on an ass, great multitudes came forth to greet Him. Clothes and palm branches they spread in the way, and cried, "Blessed is the King that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Suddenly, turning the shoulder of Olivet, He beheld the whole city of the Great King spread out before Him, glowing with splendor in the morning sun. How proudly she reared her battlements beyond the valley; how beautiful her Temple and her palaces, how strong her majestic towers! But in her coming rejection of Himself He read the sentence that doomed her pride, her strength, and beauty to destruction. Not His own sufferings but love for His people caused Him to weep over Jerusalem. Winding down, possibly through Gethsemane, to the bottom of the Kidron, they climbed the steeps beyond, and entered the city. That day He moved about unhindered, and at eve returned to Bethany.

Second day.

Approaching the city on the second day of the week, He sought fruit upon a wayside fig tree; finding none, He cursed it, and passed on. He turned out again from the Temple the money-changers who had profaned His Father's house. He exercised undisputed authority. The populace supporting Him, His enemies held themselves in check. Evening found Him once more in the retirement of Bethany.

Third day.

The third day the disciples saw the fig tree withered, and the incident was used to teach the value of faith. In the Temple the chief priests demanded by what authority He acted. He asked them first to say whether the baptism of John was from heaven or from men, and caught them on the horns of a dilemma. For reasons of their own they professed ignorance, and Jesus declined to answer their question, but spoke the parables of the two sons, the vineyard, and the wedding feast. The Pharisees easily perceived that these parables were spoken of them, yet dared not touch Jesus for fear of the people.

Paying Tribute.

A question as to the legality of paying tribute to the emperor elicited His famous reply, on being shown a coin with Cæsar's image on it: "Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's." Baffling the Sadducees, with their cunningly constructed case as to marriage in a future state, He proved from the law, which they accepted, the doctrine of immortality, which they denied. If God is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, these men are alive, for He is not the God of the dead. Then it was the turn of the Pharisee.

commandment in the law—a question often discussed by the scholars of the Rabbis. Jesus summarized the whole in two requirements, love to God and love to man. The lawyer was satisfied, and Jesus said to him, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." Then He turned to question the Pharisees. They confessed that Messiah should be the son of David. "How then," said He, "if He be his son, does David in the spirit call Him Lord?" His questioners were silenced. Then followed a discourse of warning and rebuke of those "leaders" who had so grievously misled the people. The touching incident of the widow's mites served to show wherein the value of a gift for God consists.

tion of the company. Then came to Jesus thoughts of the contrast between that gorgeous scene and the utter desolation that should soon overwhelm the holy mountain. He painted a lurid picture of the calamities of these last days, enforcing the lessons He sought to teach by the parables of the good man of the house, the good and evil servants, the ten virgins, and the talents, and by describing the final Judgment.

Fourth day.
Mt. 26. 3-5.

Lu. 22. 1, 2.

That same evening, whereon the fourth day began, the leaders of the various sects whom He had so denounced, forgetting their differences in a common sentiment of hatred towards the Prophet of Nazareth, met to plan His murder. They feared to make a public arrest while the crowds were yet in the city for the feast, lest a tumult should ensue.

Their purposes were hastened by the offer of Judas Iscariot, one of the Twelve, to betray Him quietly into their hands. Jesus knew of the plot, and mentioned it, but none understood. So, for a pitiful thirty pieces of silver, the Saviour of the world was to be given up to His foes by a professed friend. Most of those who heard Jesus and saw His works unhappily remained impenitent and unbelieving. Some rulers were convinced, but feared to confess. This day Jesus again taught, warning men that His message was of God, and that by its reception or rejection they should be judged.

Fifth day.
Mt. 26. 17-19.
Mk. 14. 12-16.

The fifth day Jesus sent two of His disciples to prepare for the Passover in an upper room to which He directed them. Thither, as day declined, He followed with the rest.

Sixth day. Mt. 26. 21–35. Mk. 14. 18–31. Lu. 22. 19–38. Jo. 13. 21–38. Jo. 14, 15, 16, 17.

Sitting down together after sunset, Jesus and His disciples ate their last Passover. As the meal progressed, they were taught again a most necessary lesson in humility, Jesus washing their feet. While celebrating for the last time the characteristic rite of the old covenant, He instituted that of the new: His body and blood, given under and with the bread and wine, showing forth His death for them, and reminding them of His promised return. Judas having gone, Peter and the other disciples protested their resolve to stand by Jesus in all extremities. Then followed the discourses recorded in St. John 14-16, and the great intercessory prayer of St. John 17.

Midnight.

Perhaps about midnight, they crossed the Kidron to Olivet, and there, in Gethsemane, witnessed in part only by the chosen three, Jesus underwent His mysterious agony. Thither, knowing His haunts, Judas led the band charged to apprehend Him. By a treacherous kiss he pointed out their victim. Peter was ready to fight for his Master, and smote the servant of the high priest with his sword; but Jesus reproved him, and healed the servant's wound.

The disciples were dispersed, and Jesus was hurried first to the house of Annas, father-in-law of Caiaphas the high-priest. Annas had Him bound, and sent prisoner to Caiaphas. The house of the latter probably consisted of rooms built in a square round an open court, entrance being obtained by a door which was kept by an attendant. John, having acquaintance here, secured the admission of Peter also. So lamentably did Peter's courage fail him that thrice he denied all knowledge of Jesus, lapsing even into oaths—"I know Him not," "I know not this man,"—until a look from Jesus sent him forth in tears of bitter repentance.

Six o'clock, counting from Midnight. Mt. 27. 1–11. Mk. 15. 1–3. Lu. 23. 1–5. Jo. 18. 28–40.

The Sanhedrin, the great council of the Jews, assembled here. Jesus was subjected to a mock trial. Suborned witnesses disagreeing, Jesus at last acknowledged His Messiahship and essential Deity, whereupon He was condemned to death, and treated with the grossest ignominy.

Before Pilate. Lu. 23. 6–12.

Mt. 27. 12–30. Mk. 15. 9–20. Lu. 23. 13–25. Jo. 19. 1–17.

Sentence could be executed only by Roman sanction. Pilate the procurator would disdain their religious questions. Therefore to him they accused Jesus of treason, in making Himself a king. Meantime, Judas, repenting too late his treachery, flung back the price of innocent blood to his employers, and in remorse went out and hanged himself.

Pilate's first examination proved Jesus innocent. This stimulated the fury of His accusers. Hearing that He belonged to Galilee, Pilate sent Him to Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great. "That fox" hoped for entertainment by the miracle-worker: disappointed, he let his minions mock and put Him to shame, and sent Him back to Pilate.

The procurator suggested a compromise. Jesus was innocent; but to save the dignity of His accusers, he would scourge Him, dishonor Him in the eyes of the people, and turn His pretensions to ridicule. Then, as the custom was to liberate one prisoner at the feast, he would let Jesus go. But no; the Jews would have Barabbas the murderer. Jesus must die. Disregarding a warning from his wife, who had suffered many things in a dream "because of this just man," Pilate gave Him up to mockery and abuse. He led Him forth, scourged, crowned with thorns, clothed in purple, and, evidently trying to move the people's sympathies, exclaimed, "Behold the man!"

Hearing, in the fresh tumult that arose, that Jesus claimed to be the Son of God, his superstitious dread was stirred, and he would fain yet have saved Him. But the ominous shout, "If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæsar's friend," decided him, and Jesus was given up to be crucified. Carrying His cross, helped part of the way by Simon the Cyrenian, with two thieves doomed to death, He was hurried to Calvary and there crucified. In His agony He yet prayed for His murderers. "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." One of the thieves dying by Him repented, appealed to Him, and received the assurance, "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." The executioners claimed the garments of the crucified. These were divided, but for Jesus' vesture they cast lots. In tender care for His mother, He asked John to be a son to her. At midday thick darkness fell, and lasted for three hours. In this gloom Jesus spoke four times: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" "I thirst," expressing the awful agony of his condition. "It is finished;" and finally, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit."

His "loud voice" showed physical energies unimpaired to the last. Nature quivered in sympathy at the moment of His death: there was a great earthquake, and the veil of the Temple was rent in twain. The centurion in charge of the execution exclaimed in amazement, "Truly this man was the Son of God."

From Calvary to Olivet.

The bodies must be removed before the Sabbath; death must be hastened by breaking the victims' legs. Thus the thieves were treated; Jesus was already dead. One thrust a spear into His side, and there issued blood and water. Joseph of Arimathæa, a secret disciple, begged His body, and in company with Nicodemus wrapped it in linen cloth with spices, and laid it in his own new tomb, in a garden hard by. A great stone, rolled against the mouth of the burial cave, at the request of Jesus' enemies was sealed, and a guard set to prevent the body from being stolen. From the afternoon of the sixth till the morning of the first day of the week, the body of Jesus lay in the grave.

The exact scene of the crucifixion is greatly in dispute. A little hill outside the Damascus Gate, bearing a striking resemblance to a skull, may quite well have been "Golgotha," the "place of a skull," where Jesus suffered.

At early dawn on the first day of the week, women, with sweet spices to complete the anointing, found the tomb empty. Two men in shining raiment told them Jesus had risen. Hearing this, Peter and John ran to the tomb, and saw that it was so. The watch reported their strange experience, but the chief priests bribed them to say the body was stolen while they slept.

Jesus was seen by Mary Magdalene, by the women returning from the sepulchre, by Simon Peter, and by the two disciples on the way to Emmaus. He appeared to the ten apostles, Thomas being absent. A week later, Thomas being present, He came and convinced the doubter that He was indeed risen. At an appointed rendezvous in Galilee, on some mountain overlooking the scene of His former labors, He met the eleven again, and commissioned them to preach the gospel to all men. On the shore of the Sea of Tiberias, He came to them in the gray morning, and at His direction a great draught of fishes was taken. Peter was assured of forgiveness, and assigned his work.

We hear of Him being seen by five hundred brethren at once, by James, and by all the apostles. Finally, forty days after the resurrection, He led His disciples out to some quiet spot on the ridge of Olivet near Bethany, and while stretching out His hands to bless them, He was parted from them, and received up into heaven. JEWISH [jew'ish] HISTORY BETWEEN THE TESTAMENTS. The whole period falls into four epochs. [See general summary of Jewish History under CHRONOLOGY.]

I. Persian Period (537–330 B.C.), Nehemiah (444 B.C.) had been a favorite at the court to which, ninety years before, the Jews had owed their return from exile; and, on the whole, the restored remnant remained loyal to the "great king," in spite of the "tribute" and other galling features of their subjection. Many Jews, however, were removed to Babylonia and elsewhere by Artaxerxes Ochus, about 350 B.C., for taking part in a revolt. To the last century of Persian rule belong the final breach between the Jews and the Samaritans, the gradual replacement among the Jews of Hebrew by the widespread Aramaic dialect, and the beginning of the recovery of Galilee to the faith of Jehovah.

II. Greek Period (330–167 B.C.). Alexander the Great, who ushers in this period, besides granting peculiar privileges to Jerusalem, bestowed marks of favor upon the Jews settled by him in his new city, Alexandria. It was here that Judaism entered into its most intimate relations with the Greek world of thought and literature. On Alexander's death (323 B.C.) his conquests passed into the hands of his generals; and during the struggles which ensued Palestine shared in the confusion, until the battle of Ipsus (301 B.C.) made the kings of Egypt (the Ptolemies) its overlords for a full century, in spite of several attempts on the part of the rival kings of Syria (the Seleucids) to overthrow them. The new sovereign power was both stronger and juster than the Persian; and under it the government at Jerusalem in the hands of the high-priestly dynasty, assisted by a sort of senate including the higher ranks of the priesthood, grew and consolidated. Outside Palestine, too, the Jews waxed influential, not only in Alexandria, but also in Libya, Cyrene, Asia Minor, and all parts of Syria, where they settled either by the compulsion or favor of Ptolemies and Seleucids. From the other side also foreign intercourse was fostered by Greek settlements in Northern Palestine, especially about the Sea of Galilee.

The most momentous outcome of all this was the Greek version of the Hebrew Scriptures, called the Septuagint (q.v.), which did much to break down Jewish isolation, and fixed the type of language in which the New Testament is written. The influence of Hellenic culture was at work both in the life and literature of the Jews during the Ptolemaic supremacy (320–198 B.C.), but its effects became clearer after 198 B.C., when Antiochus the Great brought Judæa under Seleucid or Syrian sway.

The priestly nobility grew more worldly in spirit as Hellenism advanced. The high-priesthood became an object of base intrigue. Under Antiochus Epiphanes it became the fashion among the upper classes to turn their names into Greek forms (e.g. Menelaus for Menahem), and in other less innocent ways to obscure their Jewish origin. At length the folly of Antiochus and his high-priestly tools led to a violent crisis and revolt.

III. Maccabæan or Asmonæan Period (167–63 B.C.). The outrages upon the national religion which stung the Maccabees (q.v.) into revolt stirred the people to realize the value of their distinctive faith. From their ranks had arisen a party called the Chasidim, distinguished for piety. The Maccabæan movement carried these with it, and became a rally of the whole nation to the faith of its fathers. By the wars of liberation from the yoke of Syria the religious end was attained. The Temple was restored and solemnly rededicated (165 B.C.), the rival temple on Mount Gerizim razed along with the Samaritan capital itself (129 B.C.), and the Maccabæan leader recognized as "Governor and High Priest for ever, until there should arise a faithful prophet."

But the mass of the nation was now possessed by the spirit of foreign aggression; and against this the successors of the quiet Chasidim, whose expectation was from God and not from human agency, constantly protested. "The idea of Judaism" was in danger in the eyes of this growing party of religious protest, which in the last years of Hyrcanus (135–106 B.C.) became known as Pharisees (q.v.) (Perushim, or "Separatists"). These men, whose stronghold was among the Scribes or professed students of the Law, by degrees gained the ear of the people. They indeed suffered a severe check under Alexander Jannæus (105–78 B.C.), in whose favor a revulsion of popular feeling took place. But the lost ground was more than made up under his widow Salome (78–69 B.C.), who separated the secular and sacred headship (her son Hyrcanus II. was high-priest). About this time the Sanhedrin (q.v.) came more under the influence of the Scribes than heretofore; and so it remained henceforth. On the death of Salome internal dissensions, centring round Hyrcanus and his brother Aristobulus, gave the Romans their chance. Under Pompey they occupied Jerusalem, abolished the kingship, and restored the high-priestly dignity to Hyrcanus.

IV. Roman Period. While the Pharisees gained by the change, which robbed the Sadducees (q.v.) of political power, it sharpened the contrast between the Pharisaic ideal and the popular hope of the restoration of the kingdom. Specially galling was it felt to be when Antipater, of the hated Idumæan race, became the real power in the state under Rome, till his death in 43 B.C., and when in 37 B.C. his son Herod "the Great" became by Rome's aid king of Judæa.

"By birth an Idumæan, by profession a Jew, by necessity a Roman, by culture and by choice a Greek," this unscrupulous monarch maintained himself only by inspiring fear. He filled the chief offices with obscure men of priestly descent from Babylon and Alexandria, and abolished the life tenure of the high-priesthood. He tried to overcome the national feeling against him by diverting attention to a great national object—viz. the building of a new Temple, begun in 18 B.C. His death in 4 B.C. was the signal for an insurrection, which the Romans sternly repressed, handing over the country to three sons of Herod. Of these, Philip had the land east of Jordan; Antipas, Galilee and Peræa; Archelaus, Judæa and Samaria. After 6 A.D., Archelaus' kingdom passed under the direct rule of Rome—Pontius Pilate being procurator from 26 to 36 A.D.

JOB [jōb]. The Book of Job is so called from the name of the man whose history forms the subject of it. It consists of these parts:—

I. The prologue (ch. 1, 2), which, like the epilogue (ch. 42. 7–17), is written in prose.

II. The debate between Job and his friends on the subject of his afflictions (ch. 4–31), written in poetry, and consisting of three circles of speeches (ch. 4–14, 15–21, and 22–31).

III. The speeches of Elihu (ch. 32–37).

IV. The speeches of the Lord out of the storm-cloud.

The age of the book cannot be ascertained with any precision. Contents and style point to the age of David or Solomon.

The problem of the sufferings of the righteous in God's providence is the subject of the book. Its purpose is to answer the question why the righteous is subjected to afflictions while the unrighteous enjoys prosperity. The principle upheld by Job's friends, that affliction implies sin and God's disfavor, just as prosperity implies His favor and is a token of it, Job's own conscience, accusing him of no sins to account for his unexampled sufferings, compelled him to deny. That Job's sufferings are meant to prove him, that sufferings are the trial of the righteous, is the lesson of the book.

Though Job wavers under the severity of his trials, and is baffled by the seeming impunity of the wicked as contrasted with the troubles which the righteous are made to bear, he nevertheless retains his faith in his God and in the wisdom of divine Providence. This unshaken faith in God is an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast, which moors him until he outrides the storm. Job assures himself that, as he knows God, God knows him—his witness is on high; and now he mounts, as it were, at a bound to the sublime ultimatum of his faith in an utterance which he would fain see engraved on the rock forever: whatever darkness may be about him now, he knows that his Redeemer liveth, and that he shall see God.

Job's longing that God should appear is granted; and His manifestation in answer to His suffering creature supersedes explanations. In speeches of unparalleled majesty the Lord points out the wonders of creation and His providence for all things animate and inanimate. If we are unable to fathom the wisdom of God revealed in nature, how shall we attempt to search out His ways with men? The book concludes with a restoration of Job to wealth, happiness, and favor with men.

JOEL [jō'el] most probably lived about 850 B.C., a century before Amos and Hosea. In his book there are marked coincidences with Amos (cf. ch. 3. 16 with Amos 1. 2, and ch. 3. 18 with Amos 9. 13). The book falls into two parts: I. Ch. 1. to 2. 17.—There is to be a "day of Jehovah"—i.e. a day of His power and judgment—for Judah and Jerusalem, symbolized by a plague of locusts, whose devastation is described. To meet the calamity, Joel calls for prayer and fasting.

II. Ch. 2. 18 to 3. 21.—Jehovah's answer to the prayer for help is a promise of relief from famine, of abundance of rain and rich harvests to make up for the spoiling of the locusts (2. 18-27). Then follows the pledge of spiritual blessings in the distant future, when the Spirit of God shall be poured out upon all flesh. Again we see the sky overcast and sun and moon darkened before the great and terrible day of the Lord (3. 1-8). The nations are summoned to judgment (9-14). In the terrors of that day, the believers shall find refuge in their Lord, while the impenitent shall be left desolate (15-21). The style of Joel is smooth and flowing and is of classical beauty and purity. [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

JOHN [jŏhn] (ST.), the Gospel of. The fourth Gospel has, from the earliest notice of it, been attributed to the apostle John, the younger son of Zebedee and Salome. His mother was probably the sister of our Lord's mother (19. 25). The historical evidence has been strengthened by recent discoveries. It is now quite certain that this Gospel was used by Justin Martyr; that it was one of the four combined in the Diatessaron of Tatian (about 170 A.D.). It was accepted by Irenæus, the pupil of Polycarp, himself the friend and pupil of St. John. The internal evidence is equally strong. Though the apostle does not name himself, he indicates that he is the writer.

The New Testament history is silent respecting this apostle after the council at Jerusalem (50 A.D.), but he was undoubtedly in Ephesus during his later years. Banished thence to Patmos, presumably in the reign of Domitian, he returned to Ephesus, and there lived to an extreme old age, the last survivor of the Twelve. To this fact the last chapter of the Gospel refers. His writings, and the notices of him in the other Gospels, reveal in the "apostle of love" a man of strong character. His "love" implied hatred of evil, and his writings denounce it.

The Gospel was written at Ephesus, as is generally held, not long before the death of the apostle, nearly a generation after the writing of the other Gospels.

The style is unusually simple; the thought is unusually profound. The writer makes frequent comments on the events and sayings he records, and sometimes it is difficult to distinguish between what he reports our Lord as saying and what he himself says. The facts are selected with the design stated in ch. 20. 31, to present our Lord as the divine Savior and the source of life. But the contents of the Gospel show that the selection has also been made to contrast the unbelief and the faith which met the Incarnate Word when He "dwelt among us." In the prologue the plan of the Gospel is suggested (1. 11-14). Accordingly the Gospel emphasizes the three great truths: the person of Christ; the rejection of this incarnate Saviour; the new life granted to believers as children of God.

JOHN (ST.), the First Epistle of, was attributed to the apostle John by Christian writers of the succeeding generation. In thought, diction, and style it closely resembles the fourth Gospel. Whether it was written before or after the Gospel cannot be determined. The date is not earlier than 90 A.D., though it may have been written some years later, the contents pointing to the close of the first century. The place of writing was Ephesus, as is generally admitted. The occasion was evidently the growth of error among the Christians in and about Ephesus, to whom the epistle was originally sent. Lying prophets, anti-Christs, had arisen in the Church, who denied the reality of the incarnation and had weakened the moral sense of the Christian community. "Faith and love," is the key-note of the epistle.

JOHN (ST.), the Second Epistle of, is addressed "to the elect lady and her children" (ver. 1), referring either to a church, or more probably to an individual Christian woman now unknown. Some of her children had met with the apostle, who rejoiced in their Christian conduct (ver. 4). He writes to warn against the error opposed in the first epistle.

JOHN (ST.), the Third Epistle of, Gaius (=Caius), to whom this letter was sent, cannot be identified with any person thus named in the rest of the New Testament. He lived not far from Ephesus, as is indicated by the epistle, which was occasioned by his hospitality to Christian teachers (ver. 2-4), which the apostle asks Gaius to continue (ver. 5-8). The second and third epistles of St. John reveal something of the inner life of the early Christian communities of Asia Minor.

JONAH [jō'nah], the Book of. All that we know of Jonah, beyond what is told in this book, we learn from 2 Kings 14. 25, which tells how he predicted to Jeroboam II. his victories over the Syrians. His supposed tomb is shown near Nineveh. His book was written about 760 B.C.

In the Book of Jonah he appears as a prophet with a unique mission—viz. that of preaching repentance to the great city of Nineveh. The motive of the story is plain—to rebuke the exclusive spirit of Israel, which refused to believe that non-Jews might be saved. The lesson is the more telling from the fact that Assyria was the most dangerous foe of Palestine. In form the book is not prophecy in the ordinary sense. Its place among the prophets is justified by its typical character. (Mat. 12, 39-41; 16, 4.) [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

JONATHAN [jŏn'a-than] ("whom Jehovah gave"), the eldest son of Saul, and friend of David, whose cause he generously espoused (1 Sam. 20. 34). He was a man of great strength and courage (2 Sam. 1. 22, 23). He fell, with his father and two brothers, at the battle of Gilboa (1 Sam. 31. 2, 8), leaving one son five years old, Meribbaal or Mephibosheth (2 Sam. 4. 4; cf. 1 Chr. 8. 34), and was lamented by David in the elegy called "the Song of the Bow" (2 Sam. 1. 17-27).

JOPPA [jŏp'pā] (Japho in Josh. 19. 46), the seaport of Jerusalem, traded with Tyre and Tarshish (2 Chr. 2. 16; Jonah 1. 3; Ezra 3. 7; Acts 9. 42). It is now a walled town of 7,000 inhabitants (Jaffa), with fine orange gardens.

JORDAN [jôr'dan], the chief river of Palestine, flowing south for 100 miles through a deep valley. Its three sources are at the foot of Hermon. In its course are two lakes — the Sea of Merom and the Sea of Galilee. From the Sea of Galilee to the Dead Sea the Jordan Valley (Ghôr) is 65 miles, falling from 682 to 1,292 feet below sea-level. The average width of the river is not more than 30 yards, and it varies in depth from 3 feet at the fords to 7, 8, and 10 feet. The current is very rapid. The river was miraculously crossed by the Israelites (Josh. 3. 15), and by Elijah and Elisha (2 Kings 2. 8, 14). In its waters Jesus was baptized by John the Baptist (Mark 1. 9).

The River Jordan.

JOSEPH [jō'seph], son of Jacob and Rachel, father of Ephraim and Manasseh, and thus ancestor of the people of the northern kingdom. Sold into Egypt by his brothers, he was imprisoned on a false accusation by his master's wife. (A similar incident occurs in a story written in the time of Ramses II. and preserved in a papyrus now in the British Museum.) Yet his skill in interpreting dreams brought him Pharaoh's favor and the first place next the throne. Genesis (ch. 42-47) relates how, during a famine, his father and brothers came to settle in Goshen.

JOSHUA [jŏsh'u-à] ("deliverer"), son of Nun, of the tribe of Ephraim, leader of the Israelites after the death of Moses. He led the people over Jordan, from the fortified camp at Gilgal as a base conquered a considerable part of Palestine, divided the country among the tribes, and died a hundred and ten years old.

The Book of Joshua is in the Hebrew Bible the first of the "former prophets" (see PROPHETS). It takes up the history where Deuteronomy leaves it, and, like the writings of Moses, illustrates the ever-present guidance of God in the destinies of His people. The Book of Joshua—

I. narrates the conquest of Canaan by the Israelites (1-12);

II. describes the partition of territory among the tribes (13-22);

III. contains at the conclusion a solemn address by Joshua to the assembled people (22-24).

JOSIAH [jo-sī'ah] (2 Kings ch. 22, 23), son of Amon, king of Judah from 639 to 608 B.C. In the eighteenth year of his reign the Book of the Law was discovered, and thereafter the high-places throughout the country were suppressed. He was defeated and slain by Pharaoh-Necho at Megiddo. Under his sons Jehoahaz (609), Jehoiachim (608-598) and Zedekiah (597-586) the kingdom of Judah was by turns under Egyptian and Babylonian domination, till its extinction in 586 B.C.

JOT [jŏt] (Mat. 5. 18), a transliteration of iota, the name of the smallest letter in the Greek alphabet; used metaphorically for the smallest thing.

JUBILEE. [See SABBATICAL YEAR.]

JUDÆA [ju-dæ'à), or JUDAH, the land of the Jews, a name applied sometimes to the whole land of Palestine, sometimes to the southern division only. It was used in the wider sense at the close of the Captivity, most of those who returned having belonged to the ancient kingdom of Judah (Hag. 1. 1, 14; 2. 2).

Under the Romans, and in the time of Christ, the name was restricted to the southernmost division; the northern being Galilee, and the middle, Samaria (Luke 2. 4; John 4. 3, 4); but even then it sometimes denoted the whole country (Acts 28. 21). In its limited sense, it formed part of the kingdom of Herod the Great, and included part of Idumæa, or the land of Edom. As a Roman province, it was annexed to the proconsulate of Syria, and was governed by a procurator.

"The wilderness of Judæa," in which John began his preaching, and where the temptation of Christ took place, was the eastern part of Judah, near the Dead Sea, and stretching toward Jericho. It was, and is still, a dreary and desolate region (Mat. 3. 1; 4. 1).

JUDAIZERS [jū'dā-ī'zĕrs], a name given to those among the early Jewish Christians who could not believe that all that had once been conveyed to man through the Law was now made available in far greater fulness in the Gospel. Thus they insisted on circumcision as giving a man the right to believe on Jesus as Israel's Saviour. The Judaizers were a dwindling body among Palestinian Christians, and they have left no real record of themselves in the New Testament. However, through their attempt to introduce their legalism into the early Christian congregations, they called forth Paul's matchless epistle to the Galatians, which forever eliminated Judaism from the life of the Christian Church.

JUDE [jūde] (ST.), the Epistle of, probably written by the Judas who was one of "the brethren of the Lord" (Mat. 13. 55; Mark 6. 3), while general in its address, was designed for a single church, mainly of Jewish Christians. It bears a striking resemblance to 2 Peter both in thought and in language. Its date was probably between 64 and 68 A.D. [See BRETHREN OF JESUS.]

JUDGES [jŭdg'ĕs]. The Book of Judges has received its name from the series of leaders whose exploits are recorded in it. They are called judges in the sense common in the Old Testament (cf. Ps. 43. 1 with Ex. 2. 14) of defenders of a cause; men raised up in a national crisis to assert the nation's independence. So they are called saviours (ch. 3. 9; 2. 16, R. V.). It is said of Deborah that the people resorted to her for judgment (4. 5), and Samuel, the last of the line, appears as a civil head of the whole people.

The Book of Judges was composed in the time of Samuel, or not much later. It falls into three parts:—

I. An introduction, showing the incompleteness of the conquest of the country, and its consequences.

II. The main part of the book (3. 7 to 16. 31), occupied with the exploits of the twelve judges, viz. Othniel (3. 7-11), Ehud (3. 12-30), Barak and Deborah (4, 5), Gideon (6. 1 to 8. 32), Tola (10. 1, 2), Jair (10. 3-5), Jephthah (10. 6 to 12. 7), Ibzan (12. 8-10), Elon (12. 11, 12), Abdon (12. 13-15), Samson (13 to 16).

III. Two appendices, giving the story of the founding of the sanctuary at Dan (17, 18), and that of the outrage at Gibeah by the Benjamites, and its punishment (19-21).

The purpose of the book is to record in broad outline the history of Israel from the death of Joshua to the time of Samuel. There is a certain fullness of detail only in the narratives of the exploits of Deborah and Barak, Gideon, Jephthah, and Samson. The chronology of the period of the Judges is somewhat difficult. It should be noted, however, that their activities have evidently, in some cases, been contemporaneous. This applies especially to the narratives from 10. 4 onward. Israel was evidently oppressed by more than one enemy at the same time, and hence also was ruled, at one and the same time, by several Judges (Cp. 10. 7, 8; 13. 1, 5; 15. 20; 16. 31; 1 Sam. 4. 18; 7. 1-14). The time of the Judges comprises a period of approximately 350 years, or from 1440 to 1090 B. C.

JUDITH [jū'dith]. This story was originally in Hebrew, but is not now extant in that language. It relates that when Nebuchadrezzar's general, Holofernes, was besieging the Jewish fortress of Bethulia, the besieged were rescued from their peril by the self-sacrifice of Judith, a Jewish lady, who surrendered herself to the camp of Holofernes, and by a stratagem succeeded in cutting off Holofernes's head. The story was probably written to inflame patriotic feeling at the time of some invasion. [See APOCRYPHA.]

JUNIPER [jū'nĭ-pēr] (1 Kings 19. 4, 5), an almost leafless broom found in the Jordan valley and the wilderness of Sinai.

K

KADESH [kā'desh] ("holy," similar word to El-Kuds, the modern name of Jerusalem), the name of several cities in Palestine and Syria. Kadesh-barnea (Gen. 14. 7; Num. 13, 26, etc.), according to Jewish and Christian tradition, was the later Petra, and stood at the southeast angle of the Holy Land (Josh. 15. 3; Ezek. 47. 19), in the border of Edom (Num. 20. 16).

KADMONITES [kăd'mon-ītes], or "Easterns" (Gen. 15. 19); also called "the children of the East" (Job 1. 3; Gen. 29. 1; 1 Kings 4. 30; Ezek. 25. 4, 10). They were Semites, and of Arab descent.

KENITES [kē'nītes]. A collective name for a tribe of people who originally inhabited the rocky and desert region lying between Southern Palestine and the mountains of Sinai. We hear of them among the Amalekites or Bedawin (Num. 24. 20-22; 1 Sam. 15. 6), as well as in Palestine (Judg. 1. 16; 4. 11).

KIDRON [kĭd'ron]. [See RIVERS and JERUSALEM.]

KINGS [kĭngs], the First and Second Books of, form one book in the Hebrew Canon, but in the LXX and the Vulgate are divided into two. They contain the history of the people of Israel from the last year of David, and were largely based upon the state records of the kingdoms of Judah and Israel. As they come down to the middle of the Exile, they were probably written during that period. They treat—

I. The reign of Solomon (1 Kings 1 to 11);

II. The history of the divided kingdom (1 Kings 12 to 2 Kings 17);

III. That of the kingdom of Judah, after the ten tribes had been swept away (2 Kings 18 to 25).

KIRJATH-SEPHER [kĭr'jath-sē'pher], an older name for Debir (Judg. 1. 11). It is believed to mean "city of books," and to indicate the knowledge of writing among the Canaanites, which has now been proved by the discovery of the Tel el-Amarna tablets, some of which were written by Canaanites in the fifteenth century B. C.

KISHON [kī'shon]. [See RIVERS.]

LADANUM [lăd'ă-nūm]. [See MYRRH.]

LAMENTATIONS [lăm'ĕn-tā'tions], placed after Jeremiah in our Bible, which follows the LXX, in the Hebrew Bible stands among the Hagiographa (q.v.), between Ruth and Ecclesiastes. It consists of five separate poems (the first four acrostic in structure) songs of mourning over the destruction of the Temple, the cessation of the worship of Jehovah, and the pitiful condition of the people of Jerusalem, after it had been desolated by Nebuchadrezzar. The book is undoubtedly the work of Jeremiah.

LAODICEA — ENTRANCE TO THE STADIUM. (From a Photograph by Frith.)

LAODICEA [la-ŏd'ĭ-çē'ă], one of the "seven churches" (Rev. 1. 11), stood in the valley of the Lycus, in Phrygia. It was one of the richest cities in Asia (Rev. 3. 17), a centre of banking and financial transactions, and renowned for its woollen manufactures. In the reign of Nero it was destroyed by an earthquake, and rebuilt by its wealthy inhabitants at their own cost. [Cf. EPHESIANS, EPISTLE TO THE.]

LAVER [lā'vẽr]. [See TABERNACLE.]

LAW. [See PENTATEUCH.]

LAWYERS [lạw'yẽrs]. [See SCRIBES.]

LEAD [lẽad] (Heb. opherch, Gr. molibdos). The metal was imported into Palestine apparently from Tyre. There are, however, mines in the Lebanon, as well as in Sinai, and parts of Egypt.

LEBANON [lẽb'a-non]. [See MOUNTAINS.]

LEEKS [lēeks] are included with onions and garlic as among the good things of Egypt for which the Israelites lusted in the wilderness (Num. 11. 5). The word chatzir, here translated "leeks," is generally rendered "grass."

LENTILS [lẽn'tĭls], vetch-seed used for food (Gen. 25. 30; 2 Sam. 17. 28 and 23. 11; Ezek. 4. 9).

LENTIL.
With two separate pods and three seeds.

LEOPARD [lẽop'ard], the largest and most dangerous beast of prey now in Palestine. It is found in Moab, on Carmel, and near Tabor. The cheetah, or hunting leopard, is common on the east side of Jordan.

LEPROSY [lẽp'rō-sў]. The Hebrew name means "a stroke," the disease being regarded as the sorest infliction by the hand of God. Its description is given in Leviticus (ch. 13, 14; cf. Num. 12. 10–15), along with the regulations connected with it. The "botch of Egypt" (Deut. 28. 27, 35) was probably elephantiasis, which, it is generally agreed, was the disease that afflicted Job, and which is quite distinct from leprosy. Lepers were required to live outside the camp or city (Num. 5. 1–4; 12. 10–15), and to warn passers-by by crying out "Unclean! Unclean!"

LEVIATHAN [lẽ-vī'a-than] (Job 41 and Ps. 74. 14), the crocodile; (Ps. 104. 26) a huge marine creature; (Isa. 27. 1) a huge serpent.

LEVITES [lẽ'vītes], the persons charged with the care of the Tabernacle and the Temple. They embraced all the men of the tribe of Levi, exclusive of the sons of Aaron, though the latter were also Levites and could perform any Levitical service. They were set apart for this service on behalf of the children of Israel. On the settlement of Canaan they were assigned to forty-eight cities, scattered over the whole country, and were provided with fields for the pasture of their cattle. In David's reign they were divided into four classes: (1) Assistants of the priests in the work of the sanctuary; (2) Judges and Scribes; (3) Gate-keepers; (4) Musicians. Each of these classes, with the possible exception of the second, was subdivided into twenty-four courses, or families, to serve in rotation.

LEVITICUS [le-vit'i-cŭs], the third book of the Pentateuch (q.v.), is almost entirely legislative. The greater part relates to offerings and matters of a ritual or ceremonial character, the "Law of Holiness" (ch. 19–26), however, going beyond these, and in this respect resembling Deuteronomy. The legislation of Leviticus follows up that of Exodus—the people, consecrated to Jehovah by a covenant, are hedged about with prescriptions to keep them unspotted and pure as a "kingdom of priests."

LIBERTINES [lĭb'ẽr-tĭnes], (Lat. "freedmen"), were probably descendants of Jews who had been taken to Rome by Pompey as prisoners of war, and had afterwards received their freedom there. They formed one of the many synagogues in Jerusalem, of which, according to an exaggerated Rabbinical account, there were no fewer than four hundred and eighty.

LIBYA [lĭb'ўa] (Ez. 30. 5; Acts 2. 10). The African continent west of Egypt and contiguous to the Mediterranean.

LICE [līce]. Lice were sent upon the Egyptians as the third plague (Ex. 8. 16-18). There is no doubt that the translation of the Hebrew word kinnim is perfectly correct.

LIEUTENANTS [lū-tĕn'ants], satraps or viceroys, Ez. 8. 36. Princes, Dan. 3. 2.

LIGN ALOE [lĭgn' ăl'ōes], i.e. wood aloe (Num. 24. 6), probably the Indian "eagle-tree." [See ALOES.]

LIGURE [lĭg'ūre] (Heb. leshem, Gr. ligurion). (Ex. 28. 19.) This is the gem generally called in Greek lyncurion, from a singular notion as to its origin, which is identified with the true jacinth (q.v.).

LILY [lĭl'ў] (Mat. 6. 28, etc.) may have meant the scarlet martegon lily or the scarlet anemone.

LION [lī'ŏn], mentioned in the Old Testament about 130 times, was well known throughout Western Asia as late as 500 B.C. The lion—Judah's emblem—was in all lands the symbol of royal power and strength. It was taken by pitfalls in its tracks, or by nets.

LIZARD [lĭz'ard] (Lev. 11. 29, 30), six kinds, named (R.V.) the great lizard, the gecko (or wall-lizard), the land-crocodile, the common lizard, the sand-lizard, and the chameleon.

The following are the principal families or types of lizards found in the Holy Land at the present time:—

1. The monitors or (Arab.) warans, the largest of the whole tribe, attaining to a length of from four to six feet. Monitor Niloticus was held in high esteem by the ancient Egyptians as the destroyer of the eggs and young brood of the crocodile.

2. The family of ordinary lizards is well represented in Palestine, and is met with everywhere, in cultivated, wooded, or barren districts. They are designated in Leviticus by the word letaah, which in both versions is translated "lizard."

3. The scinks are inhabitants chiefly of desert districts, burrowing in the sand or ground with great swiftness, and are as abundant as the common lizards.

4. The geckoes or wall-lizards are represented in the Holy Land by five or six species. Owing to a peculiar adhesive apparatus of the toes, these small lizards can run up the perpendicular sides of a house or wall.

5. Of another family of lizards (Agamidæ) Uromastyx spinipes is one of the largest species, attaining to a length of two feet. It is distinguished by a short, rounded head and by a powerful tail, which is surrounded by whorls of strong spines, rendering it a rather formidable weapon of defence.

UROMASTYX SPINIPES.

6. The chameleon (Chamæleon vulgaris) is common in many of the countries round the Mediterranean, and also in the valley of the Jordan. The word in Lev. 11. 30 (R.V.), which is believed to be intended for the chameleon, is tinshemeth, the root of which means "breathing." It is thought to have been applied to the chameleon because this creature has an extraordinary power of distending itself by filling its capacious lungs with air.

LOCUSTS [lō'ĕusts] are often referred to, and under nine different names: 1. Arbeh, generally and rightly translated "locust." The record of the eighth plague in Egypt (Ex. 10) gives a true account of a typical severe invasion of locusts; an east wind brought them from the other side of the isthmus of Suez, and a west wind hurled them back into the Red Sea, where they perished. In Lev. 11. 22 they are placed among the clean animals. 2. Sal'am, occurring once only, in Lev. 11. 22, and translated "bald locust." The word seems to have the same root as sela, which means rock; hence we may think of certain species of grasshoppers, which delight in basking on sun-exposed rocks, and translate the word "rock locust." 3. Chargol [see BEETLE]. 4. Chagab, generally used for and translated "grasshoppers," many of which are much smaller than locusts, Num. 13. 33; Isa. 40. 22. 5. Gazam, occurring in Joel 1. 4; 2. 25; Amos 4. 9, translated "palmerworm," is interpreted either as the locust in its larval stage, or as the larva of some other insect (caterpillars). 6. Yelek, very difficult of interpretation, the more so as there is no evidence that the different authors meant the same creature. It is translated "cankerworm" in Joel 1. 4; 2. 25; Nah. 3. 15, 16, and "caterpillar" in Ps. 105. 34; Jer. 51. 14, 27. Etymologically, the word means a creature that licks up the grass; it is evidently intended to express some insect-pest. 7. Tzelatzal. The word tzelatzal means a tinkling, musical instrument, and is hence applied to a creature able to produce musical sounds. Thus the author may have used it as the name of one of the grasshoppers, the chirping notes of which are frequently loud enough to be heard at some distance, or for the well-known cicada, which is found in abundance all round the Mediterranean. 8. Gob, appears several times (Isa. 33. 4; Amos 7. 1; Nah. 3. 17), and is translated "grasshoppers"; it cannot be referred to any particular kind. 9. Chasil, generally mentioned together with the locust (1 Kings 8. 37; Ps. 78. 46; Isa. 33. 4; Joel 1. 4, 2. 25), and therefore believed to signify the locust in its larval stage. But in our versions it is translated "caterpillar."

CICADA.

LORD'S PRAYER [lôrd's prâyer] (Mat. 6. 9–13; Luke 11. 2–4), the model prayer which our Lord taught His disciples. It was given as a lesson in prayer. As such this simple model surpasses all precepts about prayer. It suggests to the child of God the proper objects of prayer. It suggests suitable forms of language and illustrates the simple and direct manner in which we may trustingly address our heavenly Father. It embraces the elements of all spiritual desire summed up in a few choice sentences. Luther's explanations in the Small Catechism set forth its rich depths of meaning in classical form. The Lord's Prayer has been compared to a semi-circle opening upwards, "the counterpart of God's bow of peace in the heavens;" beginning in Heaven above with the address "Our Father," in each of the first three petitions coming nearer to the earth: God's Name the revelation proclaimed from Heaven, God's Kingdom the holy city coming down out of Heaven from God, God's Will extending to the earth as it rules in Heaven; at the fourth petition, for daily bread, in contact with the earth; then forthwith ascending in petitions for forgiveness from sin, help in temptation, deliverance from evil; and with the doxology rising again to Heaven, and to God's praises there. It is to be noted that the word translated "daily" in "our daily bread" answers to the Hebrew māhār, "to-morrow"; hence the rendering of the R.V. margin, "our bread for the coming day," i.e. sufficient bread to carry us from one day to the next, well agrees with our Lord's command in Mat. 6. 34, in that it asks God to free us from all anxiety as to the next day's bread. In the same petition, where Matthew gives "this day," Luke has "day by day." The R.V. in the last petition (Mat. 6. 13) has "the evil one" in the text, and "evil" in the margin.

LORD'S SUPPER [lôrd's sŭp'pĕr] (1 Cor. 11. 20), called also "breaking of bread" (Acts 2. 42), "cup of blessing," "communion of the blood of Christ," and "of the body of Christ" (1 Cor. 10. 16), and "the Lord's table" (10. 21). It is a holy ordinance which Christ instituted at the last meal (the Passover) with His disciples, on the night before His death, and appointed to be observed in remembrance of Him (Mat. 26. 26-29; Mark 14. 22-25; Luke 22. 19, 20; 1 Cor. 11. 24-26). In it, by the giving and receiving of bread and wine, Christ's true body and blood are received unto the remission of sins. As the Passover commemorated Israel's deliverance from the "house of bondage," the Lord's Supper marks the establishment of a new covenant in His blood, His death being the foundation of a new relation of His Church to God, and of the communion of His people with one another.

LOT [lŏt]. [See ABRAHAM.]

LOVE APPLES [lŏve ăp'ples]. [See MANDRAKE.]

LUCIFER [lū'çĭ-fĕr] (Lat. "light-bringer"), the day-star (Isa. 14. 12, R.V.), a name applied by the prophet to the king of Babylon in his pride and splendor and glory before his fall, when he said, "I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God" (ver. 13).

LUKE [lūke] (ST.), the Gospel of. St. Luke was a Gentile (cf. Col. 4. 11 and 14), a physician, an educated man, familiar with the eastern Mediterranean and adjacent countries. In the Acts of the Apostles (q.v.) he appears as the companion of St. Paul from Troas to Philippi (16. 10-17), where he probably remained from 52 to 58 A.D., rejoining the apostle at that place, and continuing with him to the time when the narrative closes (58 to 63 A.D.). In 2 Tim. 4. 11 he is referred to as being with St. Paul. Hence the evangelist must have been in Palestine during the two years of St. Paul's imprisonment at Cæsarea (58-60 A.D.).

The Gospel was primarily intended for the instruction of "Theophilus" (ch. 1. 3), who seems to have been a Gentile living in Italy. It presents Christ as the Saviour of men of every nation, giving prominence to His real humanity and to "the healing nature of His redeeming work."

St. Luke alone narrates the events in ch. 1 and 2; the first rejection at Nazareth; the miraculous draught of fishes; the raising of the widow's son; the anointing by the sinful woman; the mission of the seventy; the parable of the good Samaritan; the visit to Martha and Mary. He alone gives the importunate neighbor; the barren fig-tree; the Lord at the house of a Pharisee; the prodigal son; the unjust steward; Dives and Lazarus; the ten lepers; the importunate widow; the Pharisee and the publican; the visit to Zacchæus; the parable of the pounds; the mockery by Herod; the penitent robber; the walk to Emmaus; and the ascension.

The Gospel must have been written before the destruction of Jerusalem, probably at Rome, about 63 A.D. The date assigned above agrees with the view that the Synoptic Gospels are independent narratives, written within the limit of a few years.

M

MACCABEES [măc'că-bees], the family of priestly descent that freed the Jewish people from the Syrian yoke. The name Makkaba ("hammer"; cf. Charles Martel) belongs properly to Judas, the third of the five sons of Mattathias, who from his father's death in 166 to his own death at the battle of Elasa or Adasa in 161 B.C. led the defenders of their country and their faith in one of the most heroic struggles in history. His work was completed by his brothers, who founded the Asmonæan Dynasty. The Maccabees are included among the heroes of faith in Heb. 11.

The First Book of the Maccabees was written in Hebrew, the Second in Greek; but the Hebrew of 1 Maccabees is lost. The first book is a straightforward narrative of the period 175-135 B.C., written by a Palestinian Jew, from the point of view of orthodox Judaism. It was probably composed soon after the death of John Hyrcanus (105 B.C.). The second book is an abridgment of a large work by one Jason of Cyrene, and treats in a rhetorical style the period 175-160 B.C. It is less trustworthy than the first book. It was composed before the time of Philo (40 A.D.).

The value of First Maccabees will be appreciated when it is remembered that it is one of the very few surviving records of the important, but very obscure period of Jewish history between the close of the Old Testament and the beginning of the New. For this reason, too, Luther esteemed it very highly.

MACEDONIA [măç'e-dō'ni-ā], in New Testament times, the northern Roman province of Greece, the southern being Achaia. St. Paul was summoned thither by the vision of the "man of Macedonia" (Acts 16. 9-17); and he visited it a second time (Acts 20. 1-6). Philippi was one of its chief cities, and there Lydia was converted (Acts 16. 13-15).

MAGI [mā'gī], in the New Testament, the wise men from the East who came to worship the infant Christ (Mat. 2. 1, 7, 16). The name Magos is also given to Elymas in Acts 13. 6, 8, and is there translated "sorcerer"; and Simon who "used sorcery" (Acts 8. 9) was such another.

MALACHI [măl'a-kī] ("my messenger"), the latest of the Old Testament prophets, wrote about 450 B.C., and was thus contemporary with Nehemiah. His message was a condemnation of the degeneracy of the priesthood, and of the shortcomings of the people in life and worship; also a prophecy of the nearness of the day of Jehovah. [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

MALLOW [măl'lōw] (Job 30. 4), eaten by the very poor, probably a saline plant (R.V. saltwort), a species of spinach or orache.

MANASSES [ma-năs'sēs], Prayer of, an appendix to 2 Chronicles. It owes its origin to the statement by the Chronicler, 2 Chron. 33. 18, 19, which shows that there are two lost documents of Manasseh's repentance. The likeliest supposition is that it was written in the first century B.C. by an Alexandrian Jew who desired to compose such a prayer as the repentant king was likely to utter.

MANDRAKE [măn'drāke] (Gen. 30, 14, R.V. margin, love-apple; Song of Sol. 7. 13), a plant allied to the potato, with a root supposed to cure barrenness.

MANDRAKE.
With separate fruit, and root.

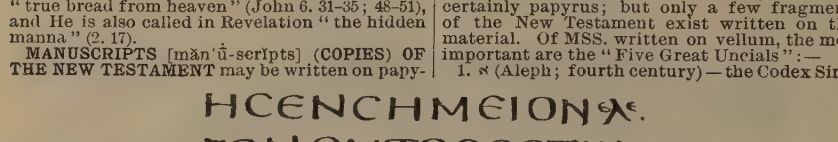
MANNA [măn'nȧ] (Heb. "what is that?"), the food miraculously supplied to the Israelites in the wilderness (Ex. 16. 15–35; Deut. 8. 3, 16). Our Lord refers to it when He calls Himself the "true bread from heaven" (John 6. 31–35; 48–51), and He is also called in Revelation "the hidden manna" (2. 17).

MANUSCRIPTS [măn'ū-scrĭpts] (COPIES) OF THE NEW TESTAMENT may be written on papyrus, vellum, or paper; and are either Uncials (large letters) or Cursives (running hand). The primitive material upon which the Apostolic documents were written (cf. 2 John 12) was almost certainly papyrus; but only a few fragments of the New Testament exist written on this material. Of MSS. written on vellum, the most important are the "Five Great Uncials":—

1. ℵ (Aleph; fourth century)—the Codex Sinaiticus, discovered by Tischendorf in 1844 (and 1859) in the monastery of St. Catherine, on Mount Sinai (now in St. Petersburg).



FACSIMILE FROM CODEX SINAITICUS.

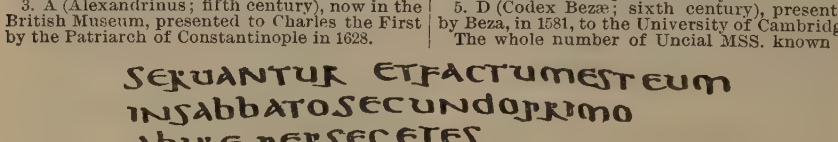
2. B (Vaticanus; fourth century), in the Vatican library at Rome.

3. A (Alexandrinus; fifth century), now in the British Museum, presented to Charles the First by the Patriarch of Constantinople in 1628.

4. C (Ephraemi Syri rescriptus; fifth century), now in Paris, from which the original text of its Greek Bible was washed out in the twelfth century, to make room for a Greek translation of some works of St. Ephrem the Syrian.

5. D (Codex Bezæ; sixth century), presented by Beza, in 1581, to the University of Cambridge.

The whole number of Uncial MSS. known to the critical world is estimated at something over 120; of Cursive MSS., 2,400 to 2,500.



SPECIMEN OF CODEX BEZÆ, IN CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY.

Lectionaries, or copies of the Gospels, or of the Acts and Epistles, arranged for reading in churches, are very numerous, and often contain fragments of very early texts. [See NEW TESTAMENT, TEXT OF THE.]

MARBLE [mär'bl.] (Gr. marmaros; in Heb. more than one word). The name is properly applied to a completely crystalline limestone, such as is used for statuary, but is commonly extended to any ornamental limestone that can be polished. In Palestine probably the latter was meant.

MARK [märk] (ST.), or John Mark (Acts 12. 12, 25; 15. 37), was the son of Mary, at whose house in Jerusalem the early Christians seem to have found a home (Acts 12. 12). He was a cousin of Barnabas (Col. 4. 10, R.V.), and the attendant of the two Christian preachers in St. Paul's first missionary journey. But he became the occasion of "sharp contention" between Paul and Barnabas (Acts 15. 36–40), in consequence of his leaving them at Perga. Afterwards, however, he was with the apostle Paul during his first imprisonment at Rome (Col. 4. 10; Philem. 24). The apostle Peter refers to St. Mark as with him when he wrote his first epistle, probably at Babylon. Evidently the evangelist made a journey to the east about 63 A.D., and he was at Ephesus with Timothy shortly before the death of St. Paul (2 Tim. 4. 11). Trustworthy details of his later life are wanting. He is spoken of as the "interpreter" of St. Peter, and, according to tradition, was the founder of the church at Alexandria. His Gospel may have been written at Rome, between 63 and 66 A.D. While the shortest of the four Gospels, it excels by the vividness of its descriptions.

MARRIAGE [măr'rĭage] among the Hebrews was more a social than a religious ceremony. Christ gave it its religious significance. At the conclusion of festivities which lasted several days (Judg. 14. 12), the bridegroom and his friends went to the house of the bride's parents and brought her home, with singing and music, attended by her friends carrying lamps and torches.

MASSEBA [massēba]. [See under ASHERAH.]

MASSORETES [măs'sō-rētes]. Down to the close of the fifth century A.D., the tradition of the accepted pronunciation of the bare consonantal text of the Old Testament was kept alive by the oral teaching of the Rabbis, and by the recitation of the Scriptures in the synagogues. The reduction to writing of this exegetical tradition was the work of the scholars called the Massoretes (from Massora, "tradition"), whose chief centre was the Rabbinical school of Tiberias. They took great pains that the texts should be kept entire, for this purpose counting up the number of words, and even the number of letters in the different books, noting expressions that occurred but once or rarely, drawing attention to peculiar modes of writing and the like. One great service rendered by the Massoretes was their devising a system of dots and strokes (vowel points), which are placed above, below, or in the heart of the consonants, and denote precisely how the words were read by the scholars of the time. These are regarded as forming no part of the sacred text, and the Pentateuch rolls which are used in the Synagogue are written in the bare consonants as originally received. Closely connected with the vowel system is the system of accents, which indicate the manner in which the words and clauses were separated or conjoined, and also form a kind of musical notation, according to which the Scriptures are to be melodiously recited. The text, with this array of symbols, is called the Massoretic text; and it gives us what was the traditional reading at the time the work was accomplished.

The Massoretic text, with its complete equipment, cannot be placed earlier than the seventh century of the Christian era. But it gives us a tradition reaching back to a much earlier time; and it is a cause of thankfulness that, in the handing down of the text, the Massoretes did not allow themselves to deviate in the smallest details from what they had received. There remain in the text, as they have handed it down, evident indications of what had been slips of the pen or mistakes of the eye of the transcribers, but the Massoretes allowed even these to stand, contenting themselves with drawing attention to their presence. [See WRITING (HEBREW).]

Manuscripts of an earlier date than the Massoretic text we do not possess. The oldest manuscripts of the Hebrew books known to be in existence date from about two centuries after the completion of the work of the Massoretes, and are simply examples of their text.

MATTHEW'S BIBLE [măt'thew's bi'ble], 1537. During the later part of his life in Antwerp, Tindale was chaplain to the English merchants of the Steelyard. He was succeeded in this office by John Rogers, a man ever famous as the first Protestant martyr under Mary Tudor. When Tindale was betrayed in 1535 and imprisoned, Rogers appears to have succeeded to his papers. In 1537, the year after Tindale's martyrdom, Rogers, who for reasons unknown to us seems to have assumed the name of Thomas Matthew, printed at Antwerp and sent over to England a large edition of a splendid folio English Bible. This contains all Tindale's translations in their latest forms; and for those books which Tindale had not been able to finish, the text was taken from Coverdale's version. This 1537 Bible is, so far as text is concerned, the true editio princeps of the English Bible (q.v.). It bears upon the title-page the words, "Set forth with the King's most gracious license." Henry the Eighth had been induced, probably by Cromwell, to sanction the issue of this Bible, although at the very time he did so the translations of Tindale were all under proscription. [See TINDALE'S TRANSLATIONS.]

MATTHEW, ST. (Heb. "faithful man"; cf. Amittai, Jonah 1. 1), also called "Levi the son of Alphæus" (Mark 2. 14; cf. Luke 5. 27-29), was, when called, a publican, or tax-gatherer, probably a collector of tolls and custom duties at the Sea of Galilee. His call is narrated in the three Gospels, but while he refers to the feast which St. Mark and St. Luke distinctly place at his house, he makes no allusion to that fact.

Papias and Irenæus, writing in the second century, state that St. Matthew wrote in Hebrew (Aramaic). The earliest citations, some of them in works of the earlier half of the second century, give the exact words of the Greek Gospel we now have, and no certain traces of a previous Aramaic Gospel have been discovered. It was written, probably in Palestine, and before the year 70, for converts from Judaism, and its purpose is to demonstrate that Jesus Christ is the Messiah foretold in Old Testament prophecy. Its characteristic phrase is: "That it might be fulfilled—."

MEALS [mēals], "eating bread" (Gen. 31. 54, etc.), in Palestine were two—viz. "dinner" about midday (Ruth 2. 14; Luke 14. 12), and "supper" at night after work was done (John 13. 2; Luke 17. 8). In early times the family sat on carpets or mattresses round a cloth laid upon the floor. In the period of the kingdom, tables were introduced, and also the Greek fashion of reclining on couches. This was at first condemned as luxury (Amos 6. 4), but in the time of our Lord it had become the common custom. The tables were arranged as three sides of a square, the places at the cross table being the "uppermost rooms," literally the "first couches" (Mark 12. 39; Luke 14. 8). On these couches the guests reclined, the head supported on the left hand, or partly on the guest beyond (John 13. 23; 21. 20). Each one helped himself with his fingers from a common dish (Mat. 26. 23). Hence the necessity for washing of hands before eating (cf. Luke 11. 38).

MEASURES [mĕas'ūres]. Bath (liquid) = 8 gallons 3 quarts.

CAB (dry) = 4 logs, or 1.4 quarts.

COR (liquid or dry) = 10 baths (liquid) = 1 homer (dry).

CUBIT (length) = 21.8 inches English (or 20.24 inches for the ordinary cubit).

EPHAH (dry) = 3 seahs, or 10 omers = about 3.23 pecks.

HIN (liquid) = 12 logs, or 4.2 quarts.

HOMER (dry) = 10 ephahs, or 8 bushels (English).

LOG (liquid or dry) = 0.7 pint.

OMER (dry) = $\frac{1}{10}$ gallon.

SEAH, (1) (dry) = 1.07 peck; (2) (land) = 50 cubits square (87.5 feet square).

MEDES [mēdes], called Madai in Gen. 10. 2, an Aryan or Indo-European people, inhabited the country to the south-west of the Caspian, whence they extended southward to the Persian Gulf. One of their offshoots was the tribe of Persians (q.v.).

MEGIDDO [me-gĭd'do], an important Canaanite fortress in Issachar (Josh. 12. 21, etc.), noticed on monuments 1600–1500 B.C., and the scene of a great Canaanite defeat by Thothmes III., of the 18th Egyptian dynasty, who besieged the city, which was walled. It was the scene of a later Hebrew defeat by Necho (2 Kings 23. 29). [See EGYPT.]

Armageddon (R.V. Har-Magedom) is named (Rev. 16. 16) as the meeting-place of the kings of the earth for the decisive struggle against the kingdom of God. The most probable interpretation is Mount (=Har) Megiddo, the name indicating that the kings and their armies shall perish as the Canaanite kings perished "by the waters of Megiddo" (Judg. 5. 19).

MELCHIZEDEK [mel-ehĭz'e-dĕk] ("king of righteousness"), a worshipper of the Supreme God, to whom, as priest and king of Salem or Jerusalem (q.v.), Abraham (q.v.) presents tithes (Gen. 14. 18–20). In Heb. 7 he is shown to be a type of Christ (cf. Ps. 110. 4).

MELONS (mĕl'ŏnṣ) (Num. 11. 5), the water-melon and the common melon.

MERODACH [me-rō'dach] (Jer. 50. 2). [See BABYLONIA.]

MESSIAH [mĕs-sī'ăh] or (in the Greek form) Messias (Heb. the "Anointed," the same as Gr. Christos), though in the Old Testament sometimes applied to such divinely appointed agents as the high priest (Lev. 4. 3), the prophets (Ps. 105. 15, and even King Cyrus (Isa. 45. 1), chiefly designates the promised Deliverer and Saviour whom prophecy foretold, and in whom all the promises of God are fulfilled (2 Cor. 1. 20).

MICAH [mī'cah] ("who is like Jehovah?"), born at Moresheth, a village south-west of Jerusalem, prophesied in the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, and was thus a contemporary of Isaiah, whom he closely resembles both in the matter and form of his prophecies. [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

MIDIANITES [mĭd'ĭ-an-ītes], an Arab race, the descendants of Keturah (Gen. 25. 1–4), held the sea-coast east of the Gulf of Akabah, till overcome by Gideon. They were partly nomads, partly traders between Egypt and Palestine. Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, was a Midianite priest and sheikh.

MILL [mĭll]. [See GRINDING.]

MILLET [mĭl'lĕt] (Ezek. 4. 9), a grass yielding grain used for food.

MILLO [mĭl'lo]. [See JERUSALEM.]

MINOR PROPHETS, so called from their collected prophecies being smaller in bulk than Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. Their chronological order, as nearly as can be made out, is as follows:—

1. Jonah (in its subject).
2. Joel (?).
3. Amos.
4. Hosea.
5. Micah.
6. Zephaniah.
7. Nahum.
8. Habakkuk.
9. Obadiah.
10. Haggai.
11. Zechariah.
12. Malachi.

Isaiah was a somewhat earlier contemporary of Micah; Jeremiah was synchronous with Nahum and Zephaniah, Habakkuk and Obadiah; and Ezekiel, the prophet of the Exile, directly precedes Haggai. [See PROPHETS.]

MINT [mĭnt] was used by the Jews as a condiment to their food, and was no doubt the mint of our kitchen gardens, Mentha sativa. The Pharisees carefully tithed this and other trifling condiments, while they neglected judgment and the love of God (Luke 11. 42.)

MIRACLE [mĭr'ă-cle]. Our word miracle (Lat. "wonderful thing") represents one of three words used in the New Testament, viz.—

1. Dunamis, "miracle" or "mighty work."
2. Semeion, A.V. 51 times "sign," 22 times "miracle"; R.V. "sign," except Luke 23. 8, Acts 4. 16, 22.
3. Teras, always "wonder."

Besides these, we have "wonderful things" "strange things," "glorious things" (each once only), and "works" as descriptions of New Testament miracles.

MIRACLES OF JESUS. [See Concordance, under CHRIST JESUS.]

MITRE [mī'-tĕr] ("turban"). The priestly head-dress of linen, wrapped round the head, and bearing a frontal inscription, "Holiness to the Lord." Ex. 28. 4, 36–39; 29. 6; 39. 28–30; Lev. 8. 9; 16.4.

MIZRAIM [mĭz'ra-ĭm]. Son of Ham, Gen. 10. 6. The Old Testament word for Egypt; literally, the double Egypt, a reference to lower and upper Egypt. Gen. 45. 20; Isa. 11. 11.

MOABITE STONE [mō'ab-īte stōne]. In 1868

MOABITE STONE IN THE LOUVRE. (From a Photograph.)

This stone gives an account of the war of Mesha, king of Moab, about 860 B.C., against Omri, Ahab, and other kings of Israel.

After the death of Ahab, Mesha, who had agreed to pay to the king of Israel "an hundred thousand lambs, and an hundred thousand rams, with the wool" (2 Kings 3. 4), rebelled; and Jehoram, Jehoshaphat, and the king of Edom marched against him. The Moabites were surprised by the Jewish league, and compelled to retire from city to city, until they came to Kirharaseth (2 Kings 3. 25). Here King Mesha attacked the king of Edom, but was repulsed. After this he sacrificed his eldest son to his god Chemosh, upon the city wall, in sight of the invaders. This deed inspired his army with fresh courage, and they drove back the victorious armies of the allied kings with great slaughter, there being "great indignation against Israel." He set up this stone to Chemosh, and he spread out and offered up "the vessels of the Lord" before Chemosh.

an inscription was found among the ruins of Dibon, giving an account by the Moabite king Mesha (2 Kings 3. 4) of his successful revolt from Samaria, and of his buildings in Moab. "Omri, king of Israel, oppressed Moab many days, for Chemosh (see 1 Kings 11. 7) was angry with his land." Then Mesha revolted in the time of Ahab. He overthrew the Israelites, took Medeba (Num. 21. 30), Ataroth (Num. 32. 3), Jahaz (Isa. 15. 4), and Nebo (Isa. 15. 2), where there had been an altar to "Yahveh" (Jehovah), and he rebuilt Korkhah, Aroer, Bezer, and other fortresses. It is clear from 2 Kings 3. 5, that the chief successes of Mesha were gained after Ahab's death. The language of the inscription hardly differs from Hebrew.

MOABITES [mō'ăb-ītes], a people allied to the Israelites, settled from before the time of Moses south-east of the Dead Sea. Like the Ammonites, from whom they were separated by the river Arnon, they were descendants of Lot, and mortal enemies of Israel. They were subdued by Saul and David, and after Ahab's death cast off the yoke of the northern kingdom. To this period belongs "the Moabite Stone" (q.v.). Jeroboam II. again made them tributary.

MOLE [mōle]. The "moles" of Isa. 2. 20 (A.V. and R.V.) perhaps included the rat, ground-squirrel, and similar animals. Our mole is unknown in Syria, but the mole-rat is very abundant.

MOLOCH [mō'lŏch] ("king"), also Milcom, Malcham, a deity of the Ammonites, Phœnicians, and Canaanites, to whom human victims (first slain, then burnt) were sacrificed.

MONEY [mŏn'ȳ] in the sense of stamped coin, did not exist in Israel before the Exile. Of coined money, an invention of the Greeks, there is no trace in Western Asia till the time of Darius Hystaspis (500 B.C.), except in the Greek colonies and in Lydia. Gold and silver were "weighed to" the seller by the buyer (Gen. 23. 16; Ex. 22. 17; 2 Sam. 18. 12; 1 Kings 20. 39; Isa. 33. 18; Jer. 32. 9 ff.). The name of the common unit, the shekel, means "weight" (cf. English Pound sterling; also Old French livre, and Italian lira—from Latin libra, "a pound"). The pieces of metal were in the form of bars (cf. the "wedge" of 50 shekels' weight in Josh. 7. 21), large pieces in that of rings, as the Hebrew name for talent ("circle") shows. The weighing of ring money is represented on the Egyptian monuments. The balance and the weights (of stone) were carried along with the precious metal in a bag attached to the girdle (Deut. 25. 13 ff.; Isa. 46. 6; Prov. 16. 11; cf. Lev. 19. 35 ff.).

EGYPTIAN WEIGHING RINGS.

Recent investigations have proved that the ratio of the value of gold to that of silver fixed in Babylon and Assyria, viz. 1:13½, prevailed over all Western Asia (in Greece it was 1:12). The value of the coined silver shekel was about 2s. 7d. or 64 cents, and of the gold coined shekel about £2, 5s., or $10.93. The whole monetary system of the Hebrews, as of their neighbors, was based on the Babylonian system of weights. The Babylonian weight-talent was = 60 minæ of 60 shekels each; but the Babylonian money-talent was = 60 minæ of 50 shekels each, or 3,000 shekels. The unit, the shekel, was the same in both; and thus the weight-talent was 157.99 lbs. troy, while the money-talent of gold was 131.66 lbs. troy. The Hebrew silver-talent, with a shekel of 9 dwts. 8.7975 grs. troy, was 117 lbs. 19 dwts. 16.5 grs. troy.

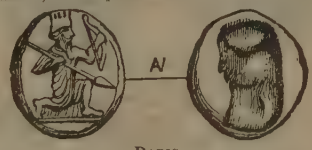
After the Exile, Persian money was current [see DARIC, below]. After the fall of the Persian monarchy, talents and drachmas came in. Simon Maccabæus struck (141 B.C.) silver and bronze coins, of which a number are still extant [see SHEKEL, below], but the Greek money was still current, and in the time of our Lord they counted by drachmas and staters. The smallest copper coin in use (Mark 12. 42; Luke 12. 59; 21, 2) is translated mite.

The purchasing value of money generally was in our Lord's time probably not more than thrice what it is to-day.

COINS OF THE BIBLE.

Bekah [bē'kăh] (Ex. 38. 26; Gen. 24. 22), half a shekel = about 1s. 4d. or 32 cents.

Daric [dăr'ĭc] (A.V. dram), a Persian gold coin = about £1, 2s. or $5.34.



DARIC.

Denarius [dē-nā'rĭ-ŭs]. [See PENNY.]

Drachma [drăch'mȧ] (only in Luke 15. 8, 9; see R.V., margin), a Greek silver coin, nearly = the Roman denarius. [See PENNY.] The modern Greek drachma = the franc = 9½d. or 20c., the Greek coinage having undergone little alteration.

Dram [drăm]. [See DARIC, above.]

Farthing [făr'thĭng]. 1. Assarion, the Roman as, a Roman copper coin (Mat. 10. 29; Luke 12. 6) = $\frac{1}{16}$ denarius. [See PENNY.] In these two places the American Revisers desired to substitute penny for farthing in the R.V. This coin, however, decreased in value from the time when silver was first coined by the Romans, among whom its trifling value was proverbial. From 89 B.C. it was only worth ½d. or 1 cent. [See PENNY.] 2. Lepton, the smallest Greek copper coin (Mat. 5. 26; Mark 12. 42) = about half an English farthing or ½ of a cent. [See MITE.]

Gerah [gē'răh] (Ex. 30. 13; Lev. 27. 25; Num. 3. 47; 18. 16; Ezek. 45. 12) = $\frac{1}{20}$ shekel (q.v.).

Gold [gōld] (Mat. 10. 9; Acts 3. 6; 20. 33; Jas. 5. 3; 1 Pet. 1. 18). The Roman aureus = 25 denarii [see PENNY], was of pure gold, and weighed 126½ grains. As the English sovereign is three-fortieths alloy, and weighs 123¼ grains, the ratio of the aureus to the sovereign is 126.25×40; 123.25×37; which gives as the value of the aureus £1, 2s. 1.8d. or $5.38 nearly, and of the denarius about 10d. or 20 cents.

Maneh [mā'nĕh] (or Mina [mī'nȧ]). [See TABLE OF TALENTS, below.]

Mite [mīte] (Mark 12. 42; Luke 21. 2), a Jewish coin, worth about a quarter of an English farthing or $\frac{1}{8}$ of a cent. [See FARTHING (2).]

Money [mŏn'ў], Pieces [pīē'çēs] of, in Gen. 33. 19; Job 42. 11; Josh. 24. 32, are of unknown value.

PIECE OF MONEY. — Mat. 17. 27.

In New Testament, piece of money, Gr. stater (only in Mat. 17. 27; R.V. shekel), a silver coin, the Attic silver tetradrachm (four drachmæ), officially tariffed by Pompey 63 B.C. for purposes of exchange, at four denarii.

Penny [pĕn'nў] in the New Testament represents a Roman silver coin, the denarius, which to the reign of Augustus was = 8½d. or 17 cents, after it about 10d. or 20 cents, until reduced in value by Nero. The American Revisers desired to substitute "shilling" for "penny" in the R.V. in all cases, except in Matt. 22. 19, Mark PENNY. — Mark 12. 15.

12. 15, and Luke 20. 24, where they held that the name of the coin, "a denarius," should be given. It was the daily wage of a laborer or of a common soldier in the time of our Lord. [See TRIBUTE, page 114.]

Pound (only occurring in Luke 19. 13–25) is the mina = 100 drachmas. [See DRACHMA, above.]

Shekel [shĕk'el] (Heb. "weight," only in Old Testament), a weight = $\frac{1}{50}$ mina = $\frac{1}{3000}$ talent = 252 grains. The gold shekel was = $\frac{1}{50}$ mina = $\frac{1}{3000}$ talent = 252 grains. The silver shekel was = $\frac{1}{60}$ mina = $\frac{1}{3000}$ talent = 224 grains. The silver shekel represents nearly 2s. 7d. or 62 cents. The gold shekel was about £2, 5s. or $10.92. The HALF-SHEKEL, YEAR 2.

"holy" shekel, mentioned in parts of Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers, means the full weight shekel, as contrasted with that which had deteriorated in value.

Silver [sĭl'vĕr], Piece [pīēçe] of. — 1. Old Testament, Gen 20. 16; 37. 28; 45. 22; Judg. 9. 4; 16. 5; 2 Kings 6. 25; Song of Sol. 8. 11; Hos. 3. 2; Zech. 11. 12, 13. Here probably shekels are meant.

2. In the New Testament "piece of silver" represents — (a) The Gr. drachma (q.v.) (Luke 15. 8; Acts 19. 19).

(b) (Mat. 26. 15) silver shekels (q.v.), cf. Zech. 11. 12.

Silverlings [sĭl'vĕr-lings] (Isa. 7. 23) = silver shekels.

2. New Testament, referred to in (a) Mat. 18. 23 to end of chapter, in the parable of the unmerciful servant, and (b) Mat. 25. 14–30, in the parable of the talents.

MONEY-CHANGERS [mon'ў-chān'ĝĕrs] sat in the court of the Gentiles, and were not allowed within the inner precincts or naos. Here they acted as bankers, and gave Jewish money in exchange for foreign, as only Jewish money could be used to pay the Temple tax. The practices of the money-changers must have been so bad (cf. Jer. 7. 11) as to warrant their expulsion by our Lord, who "overthrew the tables of the money-changers" (Mat. 21. 12; Mark 11. 15; Luke 19. 45). [See TRIBUTE.]

MORIAH [mo-rī'ah]. [See JERUSALEM.]

MOSES [mō'sĕs], the great deliverer and lawgiver of Israel, was the son of Amram and Jochebed, of the tribe of Levi, and younger brother of Miriam and Aaron. Born during the oppression of the Israelites in Egypt, he was placed while an infant child in an ark of bulrushes among the reeds of the river Nile, where he was found by the daughter of Pharaoh. Brought up in Pharaoh's house, he became learned in "all the wisdom of the Egyptians." In his fortieth year he fled to Midian, "fearing the wrath of the king" for his killing an Egyptian whom he had found ill-treating a Hebrew. In Midian he married Zipporah, daughter of a priest and sheikh, and lived forty years. Then God revealed Himself to Moses as Jehovah in a bush that burned and was not consumed, and commissioned him to return to Egypt and be the deliverer of Israel. After ten miracles of judgment or "plagues" wrought by Moses, the greatest and last of these being the death of the firstborn, Pharaoh consented, and the children of Israel set forth for Canaan. [See EXODUS AND THE CROSSING OF THE RED SEA.] Thenceforward for forty years he was their leader through the wilderness; at Sinai, where he received the law from Heaven; at Kadesh; and in the land of Moab, where he died, after viewing the promised land from the top of Pisgah. Moses, "the mediator of the old covenant," is one of the greatest figures in history. He was used by God to make the children of Israel a nation, and to establish the national life of Israel on the basis of a religious covenant (q.v.) which determined the whole future of that people and of the world. [See PENTATEUCH.]

MOTH [mŏth]. The moth mentioned in the Bible (Isa. 50. 9; 51. 8; Job 13. 28; Mat. 6. 19) is the clothes-moth (Tinea), of which several species (T. pellionella, sarzitella, tapezella, and others) are very destructive to fur and wool and the garments made of them. It is only the larvæ that feed upon the hairs, the perfect insect taking fluid food only, if any. In Isa. 51. 8 we read, "For the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm (Heb. sas) shall eat them like wool"; the word sas, translated "worm," is interpreted as the larva or caterpillar of the clothes-moth.

MOUNTAINS [moun'tains] OF THE BIBLE [bī'ble].

I. The HIGHLANDS of Western Palestine. (The order adopted is from north to south, as they come in the map.)	1. Lebanon [lĕb'a-non] (the white mountain).	Famous for its cedars. Deut. 3. 25; 1 Kings 5. 14; 7. 2; Ps. 92. 12; Song of Sol. 4. 15; 5. 15; 7. 4; Hos. 14. 5–7.
	2. Hermon [hēr'mon] (the chief mountain).	9,150 feet. Believed to be the scene of our Lord's transfiguration. Deut. 3. 8, 9; 4. 48; Josh. 11. 3, 17; 12. 1, 5; 1 Chr. 5. 23; Ps. 89. 12; 133. 3; Song of Sol. 4. 8; Mat. 17. 1; Luke 9. 28.
	3. Tabor [tā'bŏr].	1,000 feet. The rallying-place of Barak. Near Nazareth. Josh. 19. 22; Judg. 4. 6, 12, 14; 8. 18; Ps. 89. 12; Jer. 46. 18; Hos. 5. 1.
	4. Carmel [kär'mel].	1,887 feet. Scene of Elijah's contest with the priests of Baal. Josh. 12. 22; 19. 26; 1 Kings 18. 19–42; 2 Kings 2. 25; 4. 25; 19. 23; Amos 1. 2; Nah. 1. 4.
	5. Gilboa [gil-bō'ā].	600 feet. Saul's last battlefield. 1 Sam. 28. 4; 31. 1, 8; 2 Sam. 1. 6, 21; 21. 12.
	6. Ebal [ē'bal].	3,077 feet high, in Samaria. Deut. 11. 29; 27. 4, 13; Josh. 8. 30, 33.
	7. Gerizim [gĕr'i-zim].	2,849 feet high, over against Ebal. Josh. 8. 33; Judg. 9. 7; John 4. 20, 21.
	8. Ephraim [ē'phra-im].	The burying-place of Joshua. Josh. 20. 7; Judg. 2. 9; 1 Sam. 1. 1.
	9. Moriah [mo-rī'ah].	Site of Temple at Jerusalem. Gen. 22. 2, 14; 2 Chr. 3. 1.
	10. Calvary [kăl'va-ry].	Where our Lord was crucified, outside the gate of Jerusalem. Luke 23. 33.
	11. Olivet [ŏl'i-vet].	Where our Lord had His ascension; where He also wept over Jerusalem. 2 Sam. 15. 30; Mat. 24. 3; Acts 1. 9–12.
	12. Zion [zī'on].	Site of David's palace. 2 Sam. 5. 7; Heb. 12. 22.
II. The HIGHLANDS of Eastern Palestine, called as a whole range "Abarim," which means "Those on the other side."	1. Bashan [bā'shan].	6,000 feet. This hill is the most prominent eastern boundary in Palestine. Ps. 68. 15.
	2. Gilead [gil'e-ad].	Where Laban and Jacob made their covenant. Gen. 31. 48.
	3. Pisgah [piz'gah].	Where Moses stood to view the Promised Land. It is two miles westward from Nebo. Num. 21. 20; 23. 14; Deut. 34. 1.
	4. Nebo [nē'bo].	2,644 feet. Where Moses died, and was buried. Deut. 32. 49; 34. 1.
	5. Abarim [ăb'a-rim].	The Moabitish mountains, where Balaam blessed Israel. Num. 33. 47, 48.
III. Mountains beyond the Land of Promise.	1. Ararat [ăr'a-rat].	In Armenia, 16,969 feet high, where Noah's ark rested. Gen. 8. 4.
	2. Sinai [sī'nāi] (Horeb).	In Arabia, where the Law was given. Ex. 19. 1–11; see also 1 Kings 19. 8–18.
	3. Hor [hôr].	4,320 feet. In Edom, where Aaron died. Num. 20. 22–28; 21. 4; Deut. 32. 50.
	4. Seir [sē'ir].	The home of Esau, in Edom. Gen. 14. 6; 36. 8; Deut. 2. 1, 5.
	5. Taurus [tą'rŭs].	10,000 to 12,000 feet. In southern part of Asia Minor. Crossed by Paul and Barnabas.

MOURNING [mōurn'ing]. Signs of mourning were: rending the outer garments (2 Sam. 3. 31); wearing sackcloth; strewing earth or ashes upon the head (Josh. 7. 6); sitting in dust and ashes (Job 2. 8); cutting or shaving beard or hair; fasting (1 Sam. 31. 13); and, in some cases, even cutting the hands and the body (Jer. 41. 5).

MOUSE, doubtless a generic term, including all the small rodents. The mouse was forbidden as food by the Mosaic law.

MULBERRY TREES [mŭl'bĕr-rȳ trēes] (2 Sam. 5. 23; 1 Chr. 14. 14; cf. Ps. 84. 6; R. V. balsam trees), perhaps poplars.

MUSIC [mū'sic]. In the books of the Law, nothing is said either of music or of its use in the public services. David was the originator of the liturgical service of song.

According to 1 Chr. 15. 17, David instituted an orchestra, with three leaders: Heman, Asaph, Ethan or Jeduthun, all of them Levites. These pioneers founded schools of musical performance. The instruments played were:

I. Percussion Instruments.

1. "Cymbals" were used (1 Chr. 15. 16; Ps. 150. 5, etc.) to beat time. These were plates of brass struck together. In Ps. 150. 5, two kinds are mentioned. In the one case four pieces were employed, two in each hand; in the other, only two were used, i.e. one in each hand.

2. The "timbrel" or "tabret" (tambourine), usually played by women (Gen. 31. 27; Ex. 15. 20; Judg. 11. 34; 1 Sam. 18. 6; Ps. 68. 25).

II. Stringed Instruments.

1. "Psalteries." These were perhaps nearer the modern harps, or possibly nearer still to the Grecian lyre. They were set to the soprano register (1 Chr. 15. 20, cf. Ps. 46).

Ancient Musical Instruments.

2. "Harps." These were set an octave lower (1 Chr. 15. 21; Ps. 6). They therefore had longer strings than the psalteries, and perhaps corresponded somewhat to our bass-viols. At any rate their music was solemn and grave. The harps were to "take the lead" (1 Chr. 15. 21). The head of the "harpers" would therefore seem to have had the direction of the orchestra. Compare the title so often occurring in the headings of the Psalms, "To the chief Musician" or musical director.

III. Wind Instruments.

1. The pastoral pipe, or reed-flute, translated "organ" in A. V. (Gen. 4. 21; Job. 21. 12; 30. 31; Ps. 150. 4). This was used in the second Temple, especially in rendering the "Hallel" (the group of Psalms of praise, 113 to 118, which was sung at the Passover and other festivals).

2. The "pipe" (Isa. 30, 29; cf. 5. 12; 1 Kings 1. 40), the most popular of this class. It was not used within the Temple itself, but probably in processions (cf. Ps. 87. 7).

3. The "Trumpet," also the "cornet" (Ps. 81. 3; 98. 6; 150. 3), used by priests and heralds. The distinction between them is mainly that the trumpet gave a deep hoarse sound, while the cornet gave a clear note, like the bugle or clarion.

Singing. In the second Temple the whole congregation did not usually sing, but all joined in the Amen (1 Chr. 16. 36). In the "Hallel" (see above) they repeated the first line of each verse, and after the second line they fell in with the "Hallelujah"; cf. Jer. 33. 11 for the practice of the first Temple, where Ps. 118 is quoted; also Ezra 3. 10 ff., which likewise implies responsive singing by the congregation. So Nehemiah (12. 27, 28, 31, 38) appointed two companies of responsive singers at the dedication of the city wall. The germ of this institution may be found in Miriam's company of women answering the singing of the men. Antiphonal singing was performed in such cases as Ps. 24 and 121.

From 1 Chr. 25. 5, 6 we learn that women took at least occasional part in the Temple singing (cf. 13. 8). According to the Talmud, boys also formed a part of the choir.

The following scheme may serve to exhibit the essential features of the Temple service of praise:—

Performers.	Instruments.	Functions.
Priests.	Trumpets and Cornets.	Processions and feasts.
Levitical Orchestra.	Psaltery (lyre or lute).	Treble.
	Harp (viol).	Bass, to lead.
	Flute ("organ").	Occasional.
	Cymbal.	To beat time.
Choir { Levites. Boys. Women.		Ordinary and Antiphonal Singing.
Congregation.		Amen and responses.

[See PSALMS, BOOK OF.]

MUSTARD [mŭs'tard] (Mat. 13. 31, 32) reaches ten feet high in Palestine.

MYRRH [mĕr], an aromatic gum from the bark of an Arabian shrub (Ex. 30. 23; Prov. 7. 17; Esth. 2. 12; John 19. 39). In Gen. 37. 25 and 43. 11 "myrrh" is probably the gum of the rock-rose.

MYRTLE [mĕr'tle]. A small tree indigenous to Western Asia and common on hillsides in Palestine, flourishing especially by watercourses. It has dark glossy leaves, marked with transparent dots, due to the presence of a volatile aromatic oil. The flowers are small, white, and fragrant, and when dried are used as a perfume.

N

NAHUM [nā'hum] ("rich in comfort"), one of the "minor" prophets, born at Elkosh (perhaps Capernaum, which means Nahum's village), prophesied, probably under Josiah, the downfall of Nineveh, 606 B.C. His date falls between that event and about 660 B.C., when Asur-bani-pal captured Thebes, in Egypt (ch. 3). [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

NAIN [nā'in] (Luke 7. 11), a village south of Tabor, within a day's journey from Nazareth.

NATHANAEL [na-thăn'a-el] ("gift of God"), of Cana of Galilee (John 21. 2), is commonly identified with Bartholomew (q.v.).

NAZARETH [năz'a-rĕth] (Mat. 2. 23; 4. 13; Mark 1. 9; Luke 2. 4), the village in Lower Galilee where our Lord was brought up, is unnoticed in the Old Testament. It is now a flourishing Christian town of 6,000 inhabitants. The "brow of the hill" is probably the cliff to the north (Luke 4. 29). The name Nazareth perhaps means "a watch tower," but is connected in the New Testament with Netzer, "a branch" (Isa. 4. 2; Jer. 23. 5; Zech. 3. 8; 6. 12; Mat. 2. 23), Nazarene being quite a different word from Nazarite.

NAZARITES [năz'a-rītes] were not members of a party or brotherhood, but individuals "separated" to God's special service by a personal vow of longer or shorter duration (see Num. 6). Of this nature was probably the vow of the men named in Acts 21. 23-26, and even of St. Paul (Acts 18. 18). The typical Nazarite of the New Testament is John the Baptist (Luke 1. 15; cf. 1. 80, Mat. 11. 18, and Amos 2. 11, 12).

NEBO [nē'bo], a deity of Babylonia (q.v.).

NEBO, MT. [See MOUNTAINS.]

NEBUCHADREZZAR [nĕb'u-chad-rĕz'zar] ("O Nebo, defend the landmark"), misspelt Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylonia, records in an inscription his defeat of the Pharaoh Amasis in 567 B.C., verifying the prophecy of Jeremiah (43. 10-13); and a contract-tablet, dated in his fortieth year, proves that he had by that time conquered Tyre (confirming Ezek. 26. 7-14). [See BABYLONIA.]

NEHEMIAH [nē'he-mī'ah], the restorer (with Ezra) of Judaism after the Babylonian exile, was cupbearer to the Persian king Artaxerxes Longimanus, who gave him permission to return with a colony to Jerusalem in 445 B.C. Appointed governor of Judæa, he rebuilt the city walls, in spite of the opposition of the Samaritans and others, and organized the service of God; returning to Persia in 430. The Book of Nehemiah (or Second Book of Ezra) contains the history of the Jews from the Exile to the time of Darius Nothus, and is the work of Nehemiah himself. It is the latest canonical, hence reliable, record of Old Testament history.

NEW TESTAMENT [tĕs'tà-ment], Unity. The New Testament is a collection of twenty-seven distinct writings, from eight (or nine) different hands. Of these writers, four were apostles—St. Matthew, St. John, St. Paul, and St. Peter; two companions of the apostles—St. Mark and St. Luke; two our Lord's brothers—St. James and St. Jude. The books are Historical (the first five), Didactic (twenty-one), Prophetical (the last); and all find their centre in Jesus Christ our Lord. The four Gospels narrate His life on earth; the fifth historical book tells how the new life, that came from Him through the Holy Spirit, passed from Jerusalem to Rome. The epistles set forth the significance of the gospel facts, revealed according to our Lord's promise (John 16. 12, 13). The Apocalypse shows the Lamb as King, to become Victor on earth, together with His church.

Order. In our English Bible the order is not chronological. In ancient MSS. there was much variation in position. The four Gospels are almost consistently found in their familiar order, the arrangement being probably based on the order in which they were supposed to be written; in the case of Paul's epistles, on the relative importance of the churches or individuals addressed. The Book of Revelation has always been placed appropriately at the end.

NEW TESTAMENT, Text of the. The New Testament is written entirely in Greek.

The existence of a number of various readings in the text of the New Testament necessitates an inquiry into the materials from which the text is derived, and into the causes which have produced the divergent readings. Most of these divergences are mere trifles, caused by careless copying and insufficient correction.

The materials of textual criticism are:—

1. Copies. [See MANUSCRIPTS OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.]

2. Versions. [See VERSIONS (EARLIEST) OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.]

3. Patristic Citations from Copies or from Versions. The Greek copies of the New Testament, as well as the versions made from the Greek, derive great collateral confirmation from the citations made by the Fathers of the church. And here we have the advantage that almost every quotation made by a Patristic writer is a dated landmark in the history of the text; so that from a study of Origen's works we recover large portions of the MSS. which he used in the third century; from a study of Cyprian's works we restore the Latin Bible of Carthage in the same century; from the quotations of Aphrahat, the fourth-century Persian Father, we derive great accessions to our knowledge of the Old Syriac version, and so on.

It need hardly be said that the importance of such examinations of the texts underlying Patristic writings is very great. Yes, it has been truthfully said that, had the New Testament been lost, we could restore it from the citations contained in the Patristic writings.

Printed Text. The first printed text of the Greek New Testament was brought out by Cardinal Ximenes in the Bible which is known as the Complutensian Polyglot. This splendid work is named after the University of Alcala in Spain, whose Latin name is Complutum. Although this is the first printed New Testament (1514 A.D.), it is not the first published; for the issue of it was delayed, and the cardinal was anticipated by Erasmus, who brought out in 1516 an edition which was published by Froben, the printer of Bâle. The work of Erasmus was done too hastily, and in one passage at the end of the Apocalypse, his MS. being defective, he supplied the defect by retranslating from the Vulgate.

Of later editions, the most famous are those which bear the name of Beza the Reformer, of Stephen, the Paris printer and scholar, and of the Elzevir brothers of Leyden in Holland. The folio edition of Stephen in 1550 has become the standard text in many of the countries of Europe. On the other hand, the Elzevir edition of 1624 was characterized by its printers, in their second edition of 1633, as textus ab omnibus receptus, "text received by everybody," and hence is commonly known as the Textus Receptus.

Of recent editions, the most important are those of Tischendorf, Tregelles, and Westcott-Hort, and the text that underlies the Revised Version (q.v.).

NICOLAITANES [nĭk'o-lā'i-tanes] (Rev. 2. 6, 15), the name of a sect of Gentile Christians in Ephesus and Pergamum, who rejected the decision of the Jerusalem council with regard to food, and its prohibition of unchastity (Acts. 15. 20).

NILE [nīle], the great fertilizing river of Egypt. The name, which means "dark" or "blue," is not found in the Bible, but it is understood to be referred to as Shihor, or the black stream (Isa. 23. 3; Jer. 2. 18); and as "the river" (Gen. 41. 1; Ex. 1. 22, etc.). It consists of two rivers—the White Nile, which flows from the Victoria Nyanza; and the Blue Nile, which flows from the Abyssinian Mountains. These streams unite at Khartoum. To the annual overflowing of the Nile, caused by periodic rains in the southern regions around its sources, Egypt owes its fertility. Below Cairo the river is divided into two main branches—the Rosetta and the Damietta branches—which form the boundaries of the Delta; but the Delta is itself intersected by many subsidiary channels.

NIMROD [nĭm'rŏd]. [See ASSYRIA.]

NINEVEH [nĭn'e-veh], the later capital of Assyria (q.v.), after the kingdom had been extended north along the Tigris from Assur (Gen. 10. 11); the great city on the Upper Tigris, which has yielded almost a complete monumental history of Assyria. It is mentioned on monuments as early as the sixteenth century B.C., and was destroyed about 606 B.C., by the allied Medes, Persians, and Babylonians, after having been ruined by the Scythians.

NISAN [nī'san]. [See CALENDAR.]

NITRE [nī'tre] (Heb. nether, Gr. helkos or nitron). Native carbonate of soda, found abundantly in a part of Egypt about fifty miles west of Cairo. It is deposited by the waters of shallow lakes, which are dry for the larger part of the year.

NOAH [nō'ah]. [See DELUGE.]

NOPH [nōph]. [See EGYPT.]

NUMBERS [nŭm'bĕrs], the Fourth Book of the Pentateuch (q.v.).

O

OAK [ōak]. Nine species are natives of Palestine. An oak at Mamre is alleged to occupy the site of Abraham's oak (Gen. 13. 18; 14. 13; 18. 1).

BRANCH OF "ABRAHAM'S OAK."

"Oak" in Gen. 35. 4; Isa. 1. 29, etc., is in R.V. margin "terebinth."

OBADIAH [ō'ba-dī'ah] ("servant of God"), one of the "minor" prophets, a contemporary of Jeremiah, author of a vigorous prophecy against the Edomites, who had exulted over the fall of Jerusalem (587 B.C.). [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

OIL TREE (Isa. 41. 19) and pine (Neh. 8. 15; R.V. wild olive) mean the oleaster.

OLD TESTAMENT CANON [ōld tĕs'tă-ment kăn'on]. That the ancient Israelites had a sacred canon, "an authoritative standard of faith and life given by God to men," accepted as the divine Word and indissolubly bound up with their national, religious, consciousness all their literature proves; nor is there wanting evidence that from an early period in their history they were in possession of books which were venerated as sacred. Collections of laws were written down, and other things of national importance committed to writing for a memorial. The duty that was laid on the priests to teach the people—a duty not only enjoined in the Law but presumed by the prophets—could hardly have been discharged unless the Law was formulated in writing. The prophets also, or their disciples at their dictation, wrote down for national use the discourses which they had delivered in God's name. The divine authority of the Law and the Prophets was recognized in Israel long before 621 B.C., when the Book of the Law, found in the Temple, was acknowledged by king, prophets, priests, and people as an authoritative statement of the law that had always been binding on the nation (2 Kings 22.11). After the return from the Exile, Ezra (q.v.), who is described as "a ready scribe in the law of Moses, which the Lord God of Israel had given" (Ezra 7.6), for a whole week, "from the morning until midday," read the Law solemnly in the audience of the people. The Law thus formally introduced into religious service was, it is generally believed, the whole Law or Pentateuch as we now have it. It therefore, from this time, possessed all the attributes which we ascribe to canonical Scripture. All the remaining books subsequently recognized as canonical were classed in two great divisions: the Prophets (q.v.), and the Writings, or Hagiographa (q.v.).

The Hebrew Canon is thus arranged in three divisions, frequently referred to in the New Testament writings:

	BOOKS
I. Law, i.e. the Pentateuch, or five books, from Genesis to Deuteronomy. . . .	5
II Prophets—
1. Former prophets: Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings.	4
2. Latter prophets: Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the Twelve.	4
III. Writings—
1. Three poetical books: Psalms, Proverbs, Job	3
2. Five rolls: Song of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, Esther	5
3. Three books: Daniel, Ezra-Nehemiah, Chronicles.	3

The arrangement and divisions of the Old Testament Canon bear witness to the manner in which the books were brought together at successive stages. The Law-books exhibit the fundamental Covenant (q.v.), with its legal sanctions and conditions, whereby Israel was set apart and kept apart for the execution of the divine purpose. The Prophets exhibit the unfolding of the purpose in the history, and emphasize the spiritual aspect and abiding conditions of the covenant. And the Writings, in various tones, reproduce, as in the Book of Psalms, the answer of faith to God's promises, or, as in Proverbs and Job, the questionings and reasonings of the spirit as it turns its regard inwards upon itself.

All the books of the Old Testament, with very few exceptions, are quoted directly or referred to in the New Testament: certainly there are quotations from, or references to, every group of books in the Canon, which thus receives from our Lord and His apostles the highest sanction. And just as we welcome the more warmly an acquaintance who has been introduced to us by our best friend, so the Old Testament becomes luminous and precious to us from its "introduction" by Christ, who opened the understanding of His disciples to understand the Scriptures, and showed them how all things written in the Law and the Prophets and the Psalms were fulfilled in Himself.

OLD TESTAMENT, Chief Characteristics of the.—Variety of contents. The subjects with which the books deal are most diversified. There is history going back to primeval times, and coming down to the period after the return from the Exile. There is law in its higher moral aspects, and in its minutest details bearing upon daily life and religious ceremony. There is prophecy ever insisting on the justice and faithfulness of God, reaffirming His covenant relation to Israel, and reaching forth to issues affecting the whole human race. And there is the outpouring of the religious spirit in sacred poetry, and its reflections on the dealings of Providence with a world full of evil. The combination of these elements is most remarkable. The law-books are full of history; the historical books contain prophecy; the prophetical books need to be read in connection with the history; poetry is not confined to special books; and prophecy assumes poetical forms.

Diversity of style. In keeping with the variety of contents is the diversity of style. There is the stiff formal sententiousness of the law, the simple and flowing style of narrative, the lofty strain of the prophets, sometimes hurried away by the rapidity of their own thoughts, at other times rapt into the noblest poetry in their anticipations of future glory. The Psalter is a harp of many strings, now pathetic and plaintive, again joyously jubilant; and the prophetic books search out new modes of expression, or coin new words to express the new ideas with which they are charged.

Difference of date. Some parts of these books may have been handed down orally before being committed to writing. Of many of them the precise date cannot be determined, and in some books early and late matters are found side by side. They extend over the whole field of Old Testament history from the early days of Moses to a considerable time after Ezra and Nehemiah; and no age during this period is without its contributions to this literature.

Uniformity in language. With all this diversity there is a striking uniformity. The Hebrew of the earliest writings is substantially the same as that of the later books. There are varieties of style and expression, to be explained by the personality of the writer, the subject treated, or the locality of the writing; but there are no distinct dialects. The work of the Massoretes (q.v.) tended to obliterate shades of difference; still it is clear that the language early assumed a fixity which it preserved to the end.

Uniformity of tone. There is a singular consistency in the presentation of the great fundamental truths which the Old Testament embodies. The weakness and sinfulness of man, the holiness and righteousness of God, the grace of God as the source of all blessing, the rule of God as the law of the universe, the faithfulness of God as the pledge of all good—these are engrained in the whole texture of the Old Testament. The illustration of these truths in the history of Israel is the connecting bond between all the books, the whole constituting the record of the first stages in the work of redemption.

The progression of the revelation, moreover, underlies the order of the books. The law-books exhibit the choosing and preparation of a select people, and the covenant relation in which they were placed. The historical books show how this relation was in history ignored or falsified on the human side; and the prophetical books are ever holding it up as an ideal, exhibiting its divine side and its educational meaning. And then the Psalms, in particular, and the Wisdom books also, show the highest point that was attained in Israel in the assimilation and exemplification of the religion as founded in the Law and enforced in the Prophets. By the experience of failure and the collapse of external supports, as well as by the positive teaching of prophetic men, the whole of the older economy was made preparatory to a better dispensation.

The grouping of the books has, in some cases, proceeded on artificial lines. The "twelve prophets" are grouped together, although some of them are probably earlier than the greater prophets which stand before them. Still more arbitrary has been the placing of the "five rolls" together, irrespective of their connection with other books. Thus the Book of Ruth is separated from Judges, and the Book of Lamentations from Jeremiah; and our version does well to place them as it has done. The two Books of Samuel are not two independent compositions placed together, but are simply two parts of one whole; and so also are the Books of Kings.

The authorship of many of these books remains unknown, or can, at most, only be conjectured with varying probability. If we question the books themselves on the subject, it will be found that many of them fail to give any clear indication of the writers from whose hands they came. However, on the testimony of the New Testament we believe that the Pentateuch (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy) was written by Moses, as is also clear from many lines of internal evidence. The prophetical writings were written by the men whose names they bear, Lamentations being also undeniably the work of Jeremiah. The authors of the following historical books are either unknown or cannot be definitely established: Joshua, Judges, Ruth, 1 Samuel, 2 Samuel, 1 Kings, 2 Kings, 1 Chronicles, 2 Chronicles, Esther; while the books of Ezra and Nehemiah were written by the men whose names they bear. The author of Job is unknown. The authorship of the various Psalms is generally indicated in the superscription, David being the author of 73.

The authority of the Old Testament is adverted to in the preceding article (Old Testament Canon).

is called the square character, a modification of the original script, which was no doubt the character in use in Phœnicia. The tablets discovered at Tel el-Amarna (q.v.) in Egypt prove that about the middle of the second millennium B.C. regular correspondence was carried on between Egyptian and Palestinian officials in the Babylonian language, and from this it is supposed that the Phœnician alphabet was not at that time current in Palestine; but from the celebrated Siloam inscription we know that it was current in Jerusalem in the eighth century B.C. The square character was already employed in Hebrew MSS. when the Septuagint translation was made in the third century B.C. The letter yod (which was not the smallest in the Phœnician alphabet) was in our Lord's time proverbial for minuteness (Mat. 5. 18), which shows that the square character was then in common use.

In Hebrew, the consonants only were written, and the vowels were left to be inferred. This defect is remedied in printed Hebrew by an elaborate system of vowel points, known as the Massoretic (or traditional) punctuation. These points were added by Jewish doctors to fix the pronunciation so as to exclude various readings or misunderstandings of the text.

The editors of the text of the Old Testament are at a disadvantage in comparison with those of the New Testament, in that, while the books they have to edit are older, the copies are much younger. No MS. of the Old Testament is reckoned to be older than the tenth century A.D., and it has been thought that those MSS. which are extant are all descendants of a common ancestor not earlier than the second century A.D. No doubt the Jewish custom of destroying or burying worn-out MSS. has much to do with our present poverty. From Jewish fathers (i.e., the Talmud) almost nothing is to be gained for the scientific study of the text.

We have, however, two sources of evidence which are of great value—the Targums (q.v.) and the Versions, the latter including the Samaritan Pentateuch (q.v.); the Septuagint (q.v.); the Hexapla (q.v.) of Origen; the Peshito (q.v.); the Old Latin, as it existed before the days of Jerome, merely a translation of the Greek of the Septuagint; and the Vulgate (q.v.).

Long before the vowel system of the Massoretes (q.v.) was elaborated, translations had been made from the bare consonantal text, and a study of these versions enables us to infer what was the condition of the Hebrew text at the time the translations were made, and the sense in which the texts were read. The most valuable of these for comparative purposes is the Septuagint. Making allowance for mistakes owing to the inadvertence of translators, we may conclude that the Hebrew text of most of the books, at all events, was substantially the same as that preserved by the Massoretes, and that it was, on the whole, understood by the translators in the sense in which the Massoretes have presented it.

OLIVE [ŏl'ĭve], grafted on wild stock (Rom. 11. 17), extensively cultivated in Palestine for its valuable fruit and oil. The cherubim, the doors of the oracle, and the doorposts of the Temple were made of its finely-grained wood (1 Kings 6. 23, 31, 33).

OMEGA [ō-mē'gȧ], the last letter in the Greek alphabet, used in Revelation as a title for Christ as the One in whom all things find their consummation (Eph. 1. 10, R. V.). [See ALPHA.]

ONYCHA [ŏn'ŷ-chȧ] (Ex. 30. 34), a sweet spice.

ONYX [ŏn'ŷx] (Heb. tarshish, Gr. onychion). A variety of agate (q.v.), consisting of light and dark layers, such as milk white and dull green, red, or brown.

OPHIR [ō'phĭr], a seaport on the south or south-east coast of Arabia (Gen. 10. 29), where gold imported from Africa was stored. This gold came probably from Matabeleland or, according to Dr. Schlichter's account (1899), possibly from that part of South Ethiopia now named Rhodesia, which 1,000 years B.C. was a gold-producing country, colonized by Semites.

ORNAMENTS [ôr'nȧ-ments]. A full list of feminine ornaments is given in Isa. 3. 18–24. They included rings for the fingers, the ears, and the nose; bangles round the arms and the ankles; bracelets and necklaces; pomander boxes, and mirrors. Cosmetics were also used, both to blacken the nails and the eyelids, and to color the cheeks (cf. 2 Kings 9. 30; Ezek. 23. 40). [See HEAD-DRESS.]

PADAN-ARAM [pā'dan-ā'ram]. [See ARAM, ARAMAIC.]

PALESTINE [păl'es-tĭne] ("land of the Philistines"), the Greek and Roman name for Canaan, together with the country east of Jordan occupied by the Jews (the Bible itself confines this name to the territory of the Philistines). Palestine is 140 miles long, 40 to 50 broad, some 8,500 square miles in area — about the size of Massachusetts or of Wales. It is shut off from Egypt by 100 miles of desert; has the Arabian desert on the east, and the Mediterranean on the west; and is bounded on the north by the chains of Lebanon and Anti-Lebanus. Palestine lies midway between the valleys of the Euphrates and the Nile, two of the earliest seats of civilization and of empire. The mutual traffic of Mesopotamia and Egypt passed through it.

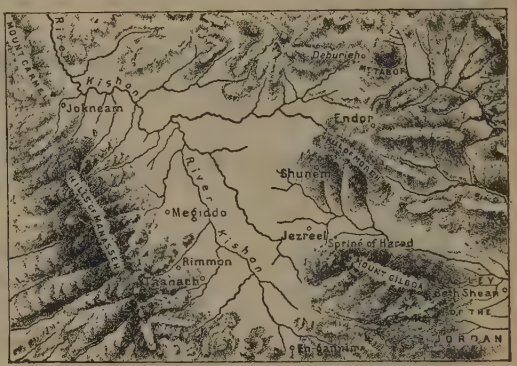
Of these empires Palestine was the battlefield down to 500 B.C. Then others followed — the Persians under Cambyses, Greeks under Alexander, Seleucus and the Ptolemies, the Romans under Pompey, the Parthians, the Romans again and again, then in 634 A.D. the Arabs, in the eleventh century the Turks and Crusaders, in the thirteenth and fourteenth the Mongols, and in the nineteenth Napoleon.

Israel came originally from the desert, and Midianites, Ishmaelites, Amalekites, Arabs, and other Semitic tribes kept pouring into the land; hence the population is in the main Semitic to this day.

The kingdom of Herod the Great embraced all the country won by the tribes under Joshua, except the tribe of Asher in the north, and a small part in the south-west. It included: (1) west of Jordan — Galilee, Samaria, Judæa, and Idumæa; (2) east of Jordan — Peræa, Gaulanitis, Auranitis, and Trachonitis, with Decapolis (part in Peræa, part in Gaulanitis). The part east of Jordan thus comprehended the ancient kingdoms of Moab and Ammon; the earlier divisions of Gilead (from the Dead Sea to the Yarmuk), and Bashan (a volcanic plateau 2,000 feet above the sea), extending from the Yarmuk to Hermon; and the regions of Golan, east of the Sea of Galilee, and Hauran, still farther east.

Palestine is laid down from north to south in four long lines — the Maritime Plain, the Western (or Central) Range, the Jordan Valley, and the Eastern Range. Palestine west of Jordan is an upland carved out of masses of limestone, 2,000 to 3,000 feet above the sea. The Ghor, or great trench of the Jordan Valley, descends from ocean-level at Hûleh to 682 feet lower at the Sea of Galilee, and to 1,292 feet at the Dead Sea.

The Western Range is broken by the Plain of Esdraelon, which opens a way from the Maritime



MAP OF THE PLAIN OF ESDRAELON.

Plain to the Jordan Valley. At its southern end it declines into a broad plateau named the Negeb, or Parched Land (English version, the South). The lower hills, known as the Shephelah, are between Judæa and the Maritime Plain, which, farther north, is broken by Carmel.

Thus the leading features of the country are: (1) the Maritime Plain, interrupted by (2) Carmel; (3) the Low Hills or Shephelah; (4) the Western Range, cut in two by (5) Esdraelon, and running south into the (6) Negeb; (7) the Jordan Valley; (8) the Eastern Range.

The rivers of Palestine are the Jordan (q.v.), with its lakes, Hûleh (Waters of Merom) and Gennesaret (Sea of Galilee), and its eastern tributaries, the Yarmuk and the Jabbok; the Arnon, flowing into the Dead Sea; and the Kishon, into the Mediterranean. [See RIVERS OF THE BIBLE.]

North of Carmel are natural harbors, large enough for the ships of the Phœnicians, whose chief seats were Accho (Ptolemais), and (farther north) Tyre, Sarepta, Sidon, and Byblus (Beirut); south of Carmel the shores are level to the mouths of the Nile. The seaports Cæsarea, Joppa, Ascalon, and Gaza have no natural harbors.

The four long lines above described, with their breaks and additions, render Palestine a marvellous mixture of hilly and level country, with all kinds of climate from the tropical oasis of the Jordan plain to the sub-Alpine slopes of Hermon (9,150 feet). The sub-tropical coast-land has a mean annual temperature of 69° F. In the Ghor in May a temperature has been observed of 110° F. in the shade at noon, and 88° F. in the shade at 8 a.m. Jerusalem (3,167 feet above the sea) has an average temperature of 63° F., ranging from 39° in January to 102° in August (the greatest extremes observed since 1860); the average variation of temperature within twenty-four hours being no less than 51° F. These changes are characteristic of the whole of Syria (cf. Gen. 31. 40; Jer. 36. 30).

The brokenness of the land, and especially the mixture of hill and plain, predisposed Palestine to be a land of tribes and clans. The Western Range, both south and north of Esdraelon, with Gilead on the Eastern Range, comprised Israel's proper territory. This confinement to the hills secured Israel's independence and purity. The plains and the valleys were the portions of the country open to the traffic and the war of foreign empires. Though the ancient highways of trade between the Euphrates and the Nile, and from Tyre to the Arabian Gulf, passed through the entire length of Palestine, Israel was planted aloof from all these in mountain isolation; long after her neighbors had succumbed to Assyrian war or Greek culture, Judah preserved her independence and the forms, if not the realities of her religion. PALMERWORM [pälm'ẽr-worm]. [See LOCUST.]

PALM [pälm] TREE, the date palm, once common in Palestine, now all but extinct there. Phœnicia means "land of palms;" Bethany "house of dates" (cf. Deut. 34. 3; John 12. 13).

PANNAG [păn'năg] (Ezek. 27. 17; R. V. margin, "perhaps a kind of confection"). It was probably "millet."

PAPYRUS [pă-pī'rŭs]. [See BULRUSH.]

PARABLE [păr'ă-ble] (Gr. "comparison"), the statement of a spiritual truth, a law or principle of the kingdom of God, by means of a description or narration of facts in the world of nature or in human experience, which are represented in such a way as to illuminate facts in the world of spirit. The parabolic form of teaching, common in the East, received the special application and significance described above in the hands of Jesus (cf. Mat. 13. 34, 35; Mark 4. 33, 34; John 16. 25, 29). His parables are recorded in the first three Gospels (John 10. 1 ff. and 15. 1 ff. are allegories). The allegory resembles a riddle; in it the thing represented is identified with the thing signified, and all its details are interpreted on this principle. But the parable needs only to correspond as a whole with the central truth it is intended to convey; its details, composed of familiar facts, form the frame in which the new truth is presented to the mind, and need not themselves convey new truth; and most of the early Fathers of the Church, who saw, for example, in the slaying of the fatted calf (Luke 15. 23) a reference to the Saviour's death, are less trustworthy guides in expounding their intended meaning than Dr. Luther, who discerned that the main thing in a parable is its point, which being found, the degree in which the details make that point clearer becomes self-evident.

THE PARABLES OF JESUS, setting forth the history and principles of the kingdom of God, may be thus classified:—

I. Founding of the kingdom by ingathering of individuals.—The lost sheep (Luke 15. 3), lost coin (Luke 15. 8), lost son (Luke 15. 11), great supper (Luke 14. 15).

II. Reception of the kingdom by various classes.—The sower (Luke 8. 5), father and sons (Mat. 21. 28), wicked husbandmen (Mat. 21. 33), rich fool (Luke 12. 16), hid treasure (Mat. 13. 44), pearl of great price (Mat. 13. 45).

III. Growth of the kingdom.—The mustard seed (Mat. 13. 31), leaven (Mat. 13. 33), growing seed (Mark 4. 26), tares (Mat. 13. 24), drag-net (Mat. 13. 47).

IV. The citizens of the kingdom—their duties and privileges.—The tower, and warring king (Luke 14. 28), two debtors (Luke 7. 41), unmerciful servant (Mat. 18. 23), good Samaritan (Luke 10. 30), talents (Mat. 25. 14), pounds (Luke 19. 12), laborers in the vineyard (Mat. 20. 1), master and servant (Luke 17. 7), barren fig-tree (Luke 13. 6), unjust steward (Luke 16. 1), importunate friend (Luke 11. 5), unjust judge (Luke 18. 2), Pharisee and publican (Luke 18. 9), servants watching (Luke 12. 35), householder watching (Mark 13. 34), ten virgins (Mat. 25. 1).

V. Consummation of the kingdom—judgment.—The two builders (Mat. 7. 24), rich man and Lazarus (Luke 16. 19), tyrannical steward (Luke 12. 42), drag-net (Mat. 13. 47), marriage of king's son (Mat. 22. 1).

PARABOLIC SAYINGS OR PROVERBS.—Ye are the salt of the earth (Mat. 5. 13), candle under bushel (Mat. 5. 15), mote and beam (Mat. 7. 3), children of bride-chamber (Mat. 9. 15), householder and his treasures (Mat. 13. 52), blind leading blind (Mat. 15. 14), where the carcase is (Mat. 24. 28), physician, heal thyself (Luke 4. 23), new cloth on old garment (Luke 5. 36), new wine in old bottles (Luke 5. 37), children in market-place (Luke 7. 32), fig-tree putting forth leaves (Mat. 24. 32).

PARALLELISM [păr'al-lĕl-ĭsm]. [See POETRY OF THE BIBLE.]

PARTHIA [păr'thĭ-ȧ], a country on the east side of the Caspian Sea. The kingdom of Parthia, founded 248 B.C. by Arsaces II., grew into an empire, and contended on equal terms with Rome.

PASSOVER [păss'ō'vẽr]. [See FEASTS.]

PASTORAL EPISTLES [păs'tor-al ĕ-pĭs'tles], the three epistles of St. Paul in which he gives instructions to Timothy and Titus for their ministry. It is believed that 1 Timothy and Titus were written after the imprisonment mentioned in Acts 28. 30, 31, and 2 Timothy during a second imprisonment at Rome.

PATMOS [păt'mos] (Rev. 1. 9), a very rugged island south of Samos, where St. John wrote the Apocalypse, having, according to tradition, been banished to it during the reign of Domitian.

PATRIARCHS [pā'trĭ-ȧrchs]. [See ABRAHAM.]

PAUL [pȧul] (ST.), the Epistles of. Of these we possess thirteen. They were written by amanuenses, and authenticated by the addition of a paragraph in St. Paul's own writing (Gal. 6. 11), or by his signature (2 Thess. 3. 17). While unbelieving critics have at various times denied the Pauline authorship of some letters which bear the apostle's name, the epistles ascribed to him in our Bible are now generally received as his.

These thirteen epistles all belong to the later half of St. Paul's ministry. In the year 52 or 53 A.D. the two epistles to the Thessalonians were written. Then follows another blank period till 57 or 58, when, within the space of one year, the four great epistles to the Corinthians, Galatians, and Romans were produced. Again there occurs an interval of five years till 63, when the four "prison epistles" appeared; and finally, yet another gap, until 66-68 A.D., when he sent the pastoral letters to Timothy and Titus.

In the earliest group the second coming and the kingdom of Christ are in the foreground. The second group exhibits the doctrines of grace in conflict with Judaism, and also shows us in detail the difficulties Christianity had to overcome in the social ideas and customs of the Roman world. Except the one to the Romans, all Paul's epistles were called forth by particular occasions and circumstances in the churches to which they are addressed. Depth of thought, fire of speech, firmness of character—these manly features, joined with fervent love of Christ and fellowman, characterize these letters.

PAUL (ST.), Early Life of. Birth and Training.—Saul of Tarsus was the son of Hebrew parents, and belonged to the tribe of Benjamin. He was "head and shoulders" above his brethren in intellect and influence, as his namesake, the king, had been in mere physique. He was born to the privilege of Roman citizenship, and is best known by his Roman name of Paul; and he used his birthright for his own protection when persecuted as a Christian (Acts 22. 25–29). He thought highly of Tarsus, his birthplace. Its surroundings were beautiful and favorable; it was "no mean city;" but its pagan immoralities must have helped to deepen his sense of human depravity (cf. Rom. 1. 26, 27). In Tarsus he was brought up as a strictly Jewish child, getting possibly some insight into pagan literature, but mainly occupied with the Hebrew Canon. At the age of thirteen, when he should become a "child of the Law," he was most likely transferred to Jerusalem, where his sister was, and there put under the charge of Gamaliel, the son of Simeon, and grandson of the renowned Hillel.

Gamaliel was a man of greater enlightenment and culture than his colleagues. He reasoned, with the tact of worldly wisdom and experience, that a bad cause perishes of itself (Acts 5. 34). Still it is quite possible that a man of such influence may, notwithstanding his tolerant spirit, have had much to do with the deputations from the Pharisees which waited upon Jesus and tried to entangle Him in His talk.

As Saul cannot well have been more than ten years younger than Jesus, and may have been still at Gamaliel's feet during our Lord's public ministry, it is quite reasonable to suppose that he saw and heard Jesus in the flesh, though such a knowing of Christ after the flesh (2 Cor. 5. 16; cf. 1 Cor. 9. 1) cannot have ended in any saving interest in Him. On the contrary, Saul seems to have been led into deep antagonism to Christ and His cause. Indeed he came, as a "Pharisee of the Pharisees," to regard Christ as the enemy of Pharisaism, as pursuing an unpatriotic course, and as never likely to give the Hebrew race the political emancipation it desired. Though a pupil of Gamaliel, Saul did not follow his master in his tolerant courses, but, with the fiery ardor of youth, stood ready to undertake a crusade against the Christian cause.

On the Way to Damascus. — Accordingly, when Stephen earned the crown of martyrdom, the young Saul did not hesitate to hold the raiment of the witnesses who secured his condemnation and stoned him (Acts 7. 58). Not only so, but he obtained authority from the chief priests to hunt down the Christians, and, first at Jerusalem, and afterwards in other cities, he prosecuted his work of extermination (Acts 8. 1–3). He was essentially a man of action.

Yet we must believe he had been discovering the weakness of the legal system in which, as a Pharisee, he had been brought up. It would appear from Rom. 7. 7 that the tenth commandment in particular had borne in upon his conscience a sense of sin which no ritual could remove. He must also have thought much upon the crucifixion of Christ and upon the significance of His resurrection — if it were indeed true, as the persecuted Christians believed, that He had risen from the dead. So we are warranted in believing that Saul may have experienced considerable heart-searching, and thought much about Christ, before he undertook the journey to Damascus which revolutionized his whole life.

His Conversion. — As he approached Damascus on his mission of persecution, he was overwhelmed by a dazzling splendor such as outshone the Syrian sun, and heard a voice saying to him, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me?" Most probably the stricken persecutor recognizes the voice; but to make sure, he cries, "Who art thou, Lord?" and receives as answer, "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest." Then is borne in upon his spirit the fact that Jesus, who was put to death through Pharisaic spite, is risen, and is sympathizing with His persecuted people, taking their persecution as meant for Himself. There is nothing better now for Saul to do than surrender to the risen Saviour. Henceforth Christ is Lord of his conscience, and his one concern is to know what his Lord would have him to do. This is not all at once revealed to him. He is directed to go on to Damascus, where he will receive further light. Here his lost sight is restored, he is baptized by Ananias, and receives the gift of the Holy Ghost (Acts 9. 10-18).

He is now driven by the Spirit, as Christ had been before him, into the wilderness, and in Arabia he spends a considerable season in meditation. Three years are spent in fellowship with his newly-found Lord and Master before he seeks any of the apostles; and these years enable him to speak later of "his gospel" (2 Tim. 2. 8), which he preached "by revelation" from Christ (Gal. 1. 12). The young, enthusiastic rabbi at Gamaliel's feet becomes, at the feet of Christ, the great teacher of the Church Universal.

At Jerusalem.—From the Arabian solitude he returned "in the power of the Spirit" to Damascus, and then went to Jerusalem for a fifteen days' visit to St. Peter. Here he doubtless verified his views of Christ and His gospel, and departed for Syria and Cilicia in a delightful state of amity with the brethren (Gal. 1. 18-24). Tarsus now became his headquarters. Most likely his family had removed to Jerusalem before this time, and they probably regarded him as an apostate beyond the pale of their care and sympathy. In deciding for Christ, he conferred not with flesh and blood (Gal. 1. 16). It was not to fall back on them, therefore, that he returned to his old home. It was to break ground, as a witness for Christ, where he believed that he would be most useful. To his tent-making, moreover, which he had learned in early youth, he now betook himself for support, while testifying as he had opportunity to the presence and power of Christ.

The Apostle of the Gentiles.—His own idea at first was that the synagogue and his Jewish countrymen constituted the field for which he was specially fitted (Acts 22. 19-21). His Lord thought otherwise. The Gentiles were henceforward to be Saul's chief care. To this special work he had been divinely called. Asia Minor, the Ægean Archipelago, Greece, Rome, became the parish of this greatest of Christian missionaries. The travels of this Roman citizen are more important to the world now than the travels of the emperor. He remains, after Jesus Christ, his Lord and Master, the most influential of the sons of men.

FIRST MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

Antioch, the metropolis of the Greek kings of Syria, and afterwards the residence of the Roman governors of the province of the same name, stood on the left bank of the Orontes, which a little lower down separates the range of Mount Amanus from the chain of Lebanon. Built partly on an island, partly on low ground, and partly on the rocky slopes of Mount Silpius, it was a city of singular beauty, adorned with magnificent temples, palaces, and colonnades. Its delightful climate, and the close proximity of the sanctuary of Apollo—with its fountains, its groves, and its licentious rites—attracted pleasure-seekers from all parts of the Roman Empire. But a large majority of its population was a worthless rabble of Greeks and Orientals, which passed its time in the theatres or in faction fights on the racecourse. There was also a large Jewish colony dating from the time when, under the Seleucid monarchs, and especially during the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, Antioch was closely connected with Jewish history. How far the Antiochian Jews had been able to resist the Greek influence to which they were exposed is uncertain; but many of the Greeks appear to have become "God-fearing proselytes," or "Proselytes of the Gate."

On the dispersion that followed the martyrdom of Stephen, certain Jews of Cyprus and Cyrene, who had been brought up in Greek lands, came to Antioch, and addressed both Jews and Greek proselytes in the synagogue. Their preaching was successful. A mixed body of Jews and Greek proselytes formed a primitive congregation, which gradually increased in numbers until it attracted the attention of the church in Jerusalem. In accordance with a former precedent (Acts 8. 14), Barnabas, "a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith," was sent by the church to encourage the new congregation. After exhorting them to "cleave unto the Lord," he went to Tarsus to seek for Saul, whose sponsor he had been before the apostles at Jerusa-

Jem, and whose special qualifications for work amongst the Gentiles he knew. They returned together (43 A.D.), and henceforth Antioch becomes the centre of progress and of historical interest in the church. Here the brethren were first called Christians, or "they that are connected with Christos"—a title that could not have originated with the Jews. Whether Christos were a god or a leader the Antiochians knew not, and popular fancy changed the name to Chrêstos ("good, useful"), a term which occurs in the form Chrêstians in inscriptions.

Agabus having foretold a dearth, the congregation sent Barnabas and Saul with relief to the brethren in Judæa. The visit, probably that referred to in Gal. 2. 2 as due to a revelation, marks an important stage in the development of the church. The older apostles recognized the apostleship of Barnabas and Saul (Gal. 2. 9), and their special mission to "preach Him among the Gentiles." Saul was also able to confer privately with the three leading apostles; and Titus, a Greek who had accompanied him to Jerusalem, was not compelled to be circumcised.

The Antiochian delegates appear to have remained in the city during the year of famine (46 A.D.), and it was possibly during this period that the wonderful revelation described in 2 Cor. 12. 2-4 took place. They left in the early part of 47 A.D.; Saul, whilst in a trance, having been told by the Lord to "depart: for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles" (Acts 22. 21). Soon after their return to Antioch, with John Mark as companion, there was a fuller manifestation of divine grace to the church. As the prophets and teachers—Barnabas, Simeon, surnamed Niger, and Lucius of Cyrene, with Manaen, foster-brother of Herod the tetrarch, and Saul—ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Spirit commanded: "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." The church, after holding a special service, bade them "God-speed"; and they descended the valley of the Orontes to Seleucia, a strong maritime fortress, built by Seleucus Nicator, with an inner and an outer harbor, whence ships sailed to all parts of the Levant. Here, about March 47 A.D., the apostles embarked for

Cyprus, and sailing out past the towering peak of Mount Casius, landed on the east side of the island at Salamis, then a flourishing city, with a large Jewish population; now a solitude, overgrown with thorns and thistles. At Salamis, where they probably found a small congregation of Christians (Acts 11. 19), they preached in the synagogue. They then made a missionary tour through the island, visiting the Jewish communities, and finally reached conspicuous hill which was crowned by the famous temple of Aphrodite, was the residence of the Roman proconsul Sergius Paulus. Amongst the suite of the governor was a Jew—Elymas, Bar-jesus—who was skilled in all the lore and strange powers of the Median Magi. This man represented a widespread Eastern religion, which must either destroy or be destroyed by Christianity; and, when the apostles were brought before the proconsul, he withstood Saul. The conflict between the two religions—one resting on presumed power of spirits, the other, on the Spirit's own witness—was short. The triumph of Christianity was complete. Elymas was struck with blindness, and the governor believed.

Paphos. This town, built on the slopes of a

Saul, like every educated Cilician and Syrian, had a native and a Greek name. He now drops his Jewish name, and adopts his Græco-Roman name, Paul. At the same time he takes the leading place, and appeals directly to the Græco-Roman world as Paul, a citizen of the Roman Empire. The power granted to Paul in his conflict with Elymas may be regarded as a token of the divine approval of this second step in the admission of the Gentiles. Setting sail from Paphos, and landing probably at Attalia, the apostles came to district of the province of Pamphylia. It was famed for the worship of Artemis; and there may still be seen the remains of a large theatre, a stadium, temples, gateways, and stately colonnades. Here John Mark departed from them, and returned to Jerusalem, under circumstances that left a lasting impression on Paul's mind (Acts 15. 38); and here perhaps Paul contracted the malarial fever, which, it has been suggested, was the physical infirmity that occasioned his visit to Galatia (Gal. 4. 13), and the "thorn in the flesh" (2 Cor. 12. 7) that frequently tormented him. Leaving Perga, they crossed the range of Mount Taurus, where they were exposed to "perils of rivers, perils of robbers," and passing through the picturesque lake district to the north, reached Antioch in Pisidia. This town, charmingly situated on the banks of the Anthius at an altitude of about 3,500 feet, was at once a strong fortress, a Roman colony, and the military and administrative centre of a "region"—the "Phrygian region" of Galatia. It was a centre of Greek culture amidst the untutored Phrygians and Pisidians, and the home of a large Jewish population, whose ancestors had been transplanted by one of the Seleucid kings.

On a Sabbath day, soon after their arrival, the apostles entered the synagogue; and on being invited to speak, Paul addressed the congregation with emphatic gesture. His address made a deep impression, and his hearers besought him to speak again on the following Sabbath. The synagogue was on that occasion crowded with Jews, proselytes, and Gentiles. The presence of the last roused the jealousy of the Jews, who contradicted and blasphemed when Paul preached the same gospel to all. The apostles at once turned to the Gentiles. Many believed, and the first Gentile congregation separate from the synagogue was established. The Jews, making use of the influence which religious women exercised throughout Asia Minor, and winning over the chief men of the city, excited a persecution. Paul and Barnabas were expelled by the magistrates of the city, and travelled as far as Misthia along the "Royal Road" to Lystra. They then crossed the hills to Iconium, a busy trading city on the great road from Ephesus to the east. The town was almost surrounded by gardens and orchards, and it lay well out on the great treeless plain of Asia Minor, from the surface of which the distant mountains seem to rise like islands from a summer sea. Here, as at Antioch, the preaching of the apostles in the synagogue was at first successful, and their missionary work was brought to a close by the machinations of the Jews. Paul and Barnabas, having become aware of a conspiracy to stone them, fled to Lycaonia. Their way for about eleven miles lay over the level plain, and then crossed the low ridge that separated the Phrygian from the Lycaonian "region" of Galatia, to

Lystra. The "very brilliant colony of Lystra," as the town is called in an inscription, was the most easterly of the fortresses constructed by Augustus to keep the wild mountaineers in order. It stood on an isolated hill in a fine valley, through which runs a river, and before it was a temple of Jupiter. From the use of the Lycaonian language (Acts 14. 11), most of the inhabitants appear to have been natives, and not Roman colonists. On one occasion when preaching in the city, Paul healed a man who had been a cripple from his birth, and the superstitious people at once cried out that the gods had come down to them. Barnabas was identified with Jupiter, and Paul with Mercury; and it was with difficulty that the apostles prevented the priests of the temple from doing sacrifice to them. Not long afterwards the fickle mob, persuaded by Jews from Iconium, stoned Paul, and dragged his body out of the city, believing him to be dead. But he recovered, and was able on the following morning to commence a journey of about twenty-seven miles, over the plain to Derbe, where the gospel was preached with success. Here, having reached the limits of the Roman province, the apostles turned and revisited Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch. On their return journey they apparently refrained from preaching, and devoted themselves to the organization of the new churches, in each of which they appointed elders. Recrossing the mountains to Perga, where on this occasion they preached the gospel, they set sail from the quaint little harbor of

Attalia, and reached Syrian Antioch about

August 49 A.D. Here, after reporting to the assembled church how God "had opened a door of faith unto the Gentiles," Paul and Barnabas resumed their regular duties.

First Council at Jerusalem. Not long after their return a difficulty arose, in consequence of the free admission of the Gentiles to the church without compliance with the Jewish law. Peter, who was on a visit to Antioch, used to eat with the Gentiles; but when certain persons came on a mission from James (Acts 15. 24; Gal. 2. 12), and preached that circumcision was necessary for salvation, he began to waver. Paul, and Barnabas after slight hesitation, stood firm, and championed the cause of freedom. Eventually, after much discussion, the church decided to send Paul and Barnabas, with certain others, to Jerusalem, to consult the apostles and elders on the question.

The delegates followed the great Roman road along the Syrian coast until they turned inland to Jerusalem; and in passing through Phœnicia and Samaria, Paul caused great joy to the brethren by declaring the free acceptance of Gentile converts. On reaching Jerusalem, Paul and Barnabas were received at a general meeting of the church, at which they gave an account of their work amongst the Gentiles, and explained the cause of their mission. The Judaizing party in the church having stated its views, the whole matter was considered at a special meeting of the apostles and elders. In the council, Peter spoke strongly in favor of freedom for the new converts; and after Paul and Barnabas had addressed the council, James, as president, delivered the decision that no heavier burden should be imposed on Gentile converts than abstention from pollutions of idols, fornication, things strangled, and blood.

This decree, a model of charity, firmness, and practical wisdom, was embodied in a letter to the Gentile converts in Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia; and Judas Barsabas and Silas were sent to Antioch with the delegates, to confirm its terms by word of mouth. The letter was read to the assembled church, and was received with general satisfaction. Judas and Silas spent some time encouraging the brethren, after which Judas returned to Jerusalem, whilst Silas abode in Antioch.

SECOND MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

After some days, probably in the spring of 50 A.D., Paul proposed to Barnabas that they should revisit the scene of their previous mission; but when Barnabas wished to take Mark, Paul refused, as Mark had withdrawn from them in Pamphylia. A sharp contention arose, which ended in the departure of Barnabas and Mark for Cyprus, and in Paul's taking as his associate Silas, a Jew and a Roman citizen (Acts 16. 37), whose full name (Silvanus) appears in the superscription of the Epistles to the Thessalonians.

After leaving Antioch, Paul and Silas must have crossed Mount Amanus by the pass known as the "Syrian Gates" to Alexandria ad Issum, and then have followed the great Roman road, that led across the battlefield of Issus and over the rich Cilician plain to Adana, and possibly Tarsus. Everywhere as they passed they confirmed the churches; but, Cilicia being part of the province of Syria and under Antioch, they did not deliver the decree.

through the realm of Antiochus (which, not being Roman territory, is not named), they came to Derbe and Lystra. At the last place Paul found a disciple named Timothy, the son of a Greek and a Jewess, who was well known in Lystra and Iconium; and, having first circumcised him, to disarm Jewish prejudices, took him as a companion. Amongst the churches visited during the journey through the "Phrygian region" of Galatia (Acts 16. 6), and to which the Jerusalem decree was delivered, were no doubt those of Iconium and Pisidian Antioch. Beyond the last place they crossed the frontier into the province of Asia; but being forbidden of the Holy Spirit to preach there, they travelled north, through the "Phrygian region" of Asia, with the intention of entering the province of Bithynia. When, however, they had reached a point opposite

Mysia, and were attempting to enter Bithynia, the Spirit of Jesus suffered them not. They then turned westward through Mysia, "neglecting" — i.e. not preaching in — it; and, travelling down the lovely valley of the Rhyndacus, probably passed through Artemea, the town of the goddess Artemis, on their way to Troas. Alexandria Troas, prettily situated on ground that rises gently from the Ægean, was one of the most important towns of the province of Asia; and its port, bordered by quays and colonnades, of which there are still remains, was a common place of embarkation for Macedonia. Here apparently Paul, who had been led onward to the coast against his original intention, first met Luke (Acts 16. 10), the "beloved physician;" here it happened that a man of Macedonia appeared in a vision saying, "Come over and help us." The invitation was at once accepted; and embarking at Troas, they sailed with a fair wind past Tenedos and Imbros to one of the anchorages, they passed the night, and the next day they sailed past Thasos to Neapolis. The Naples of Macedonia was situated on a small promontory with a harbor on each side, and from it a paved military road crossed a ridge, whence the traveller looks down upon the rich plain that witnessed the defeat of Brutus and Cassius, and the end of the Republic of Rome. On the banks of a stream sixty-six feet wide, that runs through the plain, was Philippi, a Roman colony that already claimed the dignity and title of "First" city of the district. Here, at a place of prayer by the river side, Paul preached; and Lydia, a God-fearing proselyte, who sold the purple-dyed garments of her native city, Thyatira, was converted and baptized. A few days later, Paul cast out the divining spirit from a slave-girl; and her owners, seeing their prospect of further gain gone, dragged Paul and Silas into the agora before the prætors of the city. The apostles were accused of teaching Jewish customs not lawful to the Romans; and, being condemned without investigation, were beaten by the lictors and cast into prison.

About midnight, as they prayed and sang, there was an earthquake, which shook the walls, threw open the doors, and loosed their bonds. The jailer, who was responsible for the lives of his prisoners, thinking that they had escaped, and preferring death by his own hands to disgrace and a dishonorable death, was about to commit suicide, when Paul cried out: "Do thyself no harm, for we are all here." The jailer then took Paul and Silas to his own house, and having heard the gospel, accepted it, and was baptized. In the morning the prætors, who had no power to condemn Paul to be flogged, even after trial, sent the lictors to order the jailer to release the apostles; but Paul, proclaiming himself a Roman citizen, refused to leave the prison until the prætors themselves came and besought them to depart. After staying awhile in Lydia's house, Paul and Silas, apparently leaving Luke behind them, journeyed over the plain by the Via Egnatia to

Amphipolis, on a bend of the river Strymon. Thence, after touching the coast, they followed the same road, and passed through Apollonia, on their way across the neck of the Chalcidic peninsula, to Thessalonica, still known under the slightly altered name of Saloniki. The town rose up the hillside almost in the form of a triangle—its base resting on the sea, its sides flanked by ravines, and its highest point occupied by the acropolis. Situated at the head of the gulf, strongly fortified, with easy access to the interior, and a good port, it was a place of great commercial importance, and it soon became an invaluable centre for the spread of the gospel (1 Thes. 1. 8). The town was governed by a board of magistrates, who, as is proved by inscriptions, bore the title politarchs; and the people were chiefly Macedonian Greeks, amongst whom women occupied a much more influential position than they did in Athens.

THESSALONICA.

Paul, as usual, first addressed the congregation in the synagogue. He then preached to the Gentiles; and his missionary work lasted from about December 50 A.D. to May 51 A.D. During this period he worked day and night for his living, so as not to be chargeable to the brethren, and received supplies for his needs from the Philippians (Phil. 4. 15, 16). Paul's preaching was successful, and many of the God-fearing proselytes, the Greeks, and the leading women believed. His success roused the jealousy of the unbelieving Jews, who stirred up the uneducated rabble, and there was a serious riot. Jason (with whom Paul lodged) and others were dragged before the politarchs, and were accused of the serious crime of treason against the emperor. The politarchs were obliged to take action, and bound over the accused to keep the peace. Paul and Silas were sent away by night to Berea, a pleasant town on the eastern slope of the Olympian range, with running streams in every street. Here the preaching to both Jews and Greeks was successful; but Jews from Thessalonica having stirred up the people, Paul was sent away to the sea-coast, possibly to Dium, whence the Berean brethren brought him by sea to the Piræus, and thence to Athens. Silas and Timothy were left behind, but afterwards rejoined him at Athens, then a free city of the Roman province of Achaia. Though its golden period had passed, the city was still one of the great seats of learning, and must have had a peculiar interest to Paul, himself a student of the great university of Tarsus. The agora, with its painted porticoes and beautiful statuary, was the centre of the public life of the city. On every side were to be seen the temples, the statues, and the altars of the gods of Greece, and high above all rose the acropolis, crowned by the matchless temple of the virgin goddess Minerva.

Paul at first reasoned in the synagogue, and then, in Socratic fashion, discussed moral questions in the agora with any one he met. Some of the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers, who had taken part in the discussions, brought him before the council on Areopagus (Mars Hill). Here Paul, standing in the midst of the council, addressed the assembled people, using as his text an inscription, "TO THE UNKNOWN GOD," which he had seen on one of the altars. His address was well adapted to his audience; but when he spoke of the resurrection of the dead, he was interrupted, and went out from among them. There were few converts at Athens, and Paul appears to have left the city hurriedly for

Corinth, the busy metropolis of the province of Achaia, and the residence of the proconsul. It stood on a broad terrace beneath its citadel, the Acrocorinthus, a mass of rock 2,000 feet in height, commanding a superb view of the city and province. At the edge of the lower level of the Isthmus were its harbors, Cenchrea (Acts 18. 18) and Lechæum, which made it "the emporium of the richest trade of the East and the West." At Corinth, Paul lodged with Aquila, a Jew from the Roman province of Pontus, who, with his wife Priscilla, had left Rome toward the end of the year 50 A.D., when the Jews were expelled by Claudius. Whilst working at his trade of tentmaking, and preaching in the synagogue and to the Greeks, he was rejoined by Silas and Timothy, who had been sent from Athens on a mission to Macedonia.

On their return, "Paul, constrained by the word," testified that Jesus is Christ; but when the Jews blasphemed, he withdrew from the synagogue to the house of Justus, a God-fearing proselyte, a Latin, and a citizen of Corinth. Crispus, a head man of the synagogue, believed. Then Paul was told in a vision to speak boldly, and he continued preaching for a year and six months, during which time he wrote the Epistles to the Thessalonians. But when Gallio was proconsul, the Jews brought him before the tribunal. The question was one that concerned only the self-administering community of the Jews, and Gallio, who shared the generous views of his brother Seneca, the famous philosopher, in regard to the various religions in the provinces, dismissed the case.

The Greeks, who always hated the Jews, took advantage of the occasion to beat Sosthenes, who had replaced Crispus as ruler of the synagogue, and probably taken a leading part in the prosecution. Of this summary justice Gallio took no notice. Some time afterwards, Paul, having in fulfilment of a vow shorn his head at Cenchrea, the eastern port of Corinth, sailed for Syria with Aquila and Priscilla, and probably Timothy. The ship called at Ephesus. Here, after making a short stay and preaching in the synagogue, Paul left his companions, and continued his voyage to Cæsarea in Palestine.

No details are given of the voyage or of the land journey to Jerusalem, which were probably made to keep the Passover, which, in 53 A.D., fell on the 22nd March. After saluting the church in Jerusalem, Paul returned to Antioch, where he apparently heard of the results that had followed the preaching of the Judaizing party in Galatia, and wrote the Epistle to the Galatians.

After Paul left Ephesus, there came thither Apollos (Apollonius) an eloquent Jew of Alexandria, well read in the Scriptures, but knowing only the baptism of John. He was more fully instructed by Aquila and Priscilla; and, passing into Achaia, "watered" what Paul had "planted," proving from the Old Testament that Jesus is Christ (Acts 18. 26–28; 1 Cor. 3. 6).

THIRD MISSIONARY JOURNEY.

After spending some time at Antioch, Paul went by land through Cilicia, and passed through the "Galatic and Phrygian regions," confirming the disciples. His route probably coincided with that of his second journey as far as Pisidian Antioch, whence he followed the higher-lying and more direct road, and not the great trade route through the Lycus and Meander valleys, to Ephesus, one of the most remarkable cities of antiquity. Most of the buildings were grouped on or near an isolated hill, Mount Pion, on the western slope of which, facing the port and the sea, was the great theatre, capable of seating 24,500 persons. On the plain, about a mile distant, was the celebrated Temple of Diana, containing a statue of the goddess (which, according to tradition, came down from Jupiter), and connected with the Magnesian Gate of the city by a "sacred way," bordered by tombs. Ephesus, as the seat of government of the rich province of Asia, was well fitted to be a centre of missionary enterprise.

Here Paul, after preaching three months in the synagogue, taught for two years in the lecture-room of Tyrannus; and it was probably during this period that churches were established at Colosse, Laodicea, Pergamos, and other places, by Timothy and others. On reaching Ephesus, Paul found twelve men baptized only unto John's baptism. He persuaded them to accept re-baptism, and when he had laid his hands on them, the Holy Ghost came upon them.

Ephesus was the centre of all the magical practices and superstitions of Asia, and it was inevitable that Christianity should come into contact with and eventually triumph over them. God wrought special miracles by Paul. Sceva's seven sons, exorcising in the name of Jesus, the evil spirit wounded two of them. Thereupon the practisers of magic, being in great fear, publicly burnt their books (the Ephesia Grammata), valued at fifty thousand pieces of silver. Paul was at this time intending to visit Macedonia, Achaia, Jerusalem, and then Rome, and sent Timothy and Erastus to Macedonia. But before he started himself, the opposition to the new teaching, which had become serious in 55 A.D. (1 Cor. 16. 9), culminated in a serious riot.

Many tradesmen obtained their living by supplying the Pilgrims, who came from all parts of the world to the famous temple, with victims and dedicatory offerings, as well as with food and shelter. Demetrius, a leading man in the associated trades which made small shrines for votaries to dedicate in the temple, representing Artemis sitting in a niche with her lions beside her, called a meeting of the guilds, and pointed out that Paul by his teaching was endangering their business, as well as the worship of the goddess. The "tradesmen were roused — they rushed forth into the street; a general scene of confusion arose, and a common impulse carried the excited crowd into the great theatre." There, for about two hours, the ignorant crowd continued shouting their invocations of "Great Artemis." Alexander, perhaps the coppersmith who afterwards did Paul much harm (2 Tim. 4. 14), was put forward to speak; but when it was known that he was a Jew, the clamor only increased.

The crowd was dismissed by the town-clerk, who was probably the most important official in the city; and his speech throws light on the relations in which the early church stood to the empire. Paul was in much danger from the mob (2 Cor. 1. 8), and received a timely warning not to go to the theatre from the Asiarchs, or high-priests of Asia, who were the heads of the imperial organization of the province in the worship of "Rome and the emperors." Their friendly attitude is a proof that the official and educated classes did not share the hostility of the crowd to the new religion. Paul appears to have resided at Ephesus from about October 53 A.D. to January 56 A.D., and in the autumn of 55 A.D. he wrote the first Epistle to the Corinthians. It is probable that Paul visited Corinth in the spring of 55 A.D. (2 Cor. 12. 14; 13. 1, 2), and wrote a letter to the Corinthians which has been lost (1 Cor. 5. 9).

Paul was obliged to leave Ephesus, and sailed along the coast to Troas, where he had to trans-ship. Here a door of preaching was opened to him; but he was disappointed in not meeting Titus (2 Cor. 2. 12, 13), and pressed onward to Macedonia. At Philippi he met Titus, and was greatly rejoiced at his report on the state of the church in Corinth (2 Cor. 7. 4, 13). He passed the summer and autumn of 56 A.D. in Macedonia, and during that time wrote the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, and perhaps made a short excursion to Illyricum (Rom. 15. 19). In the winter he went to Hellas, the larger portion of the province of Achaia, and passed December, January, and February at Corinth, where he was joined by Luke, and wrote the Epistle to the Romans. He intended sailing from this place to Palestine, to celebrate the Passover at Jerusalem. But he altered his plans on discovering a plot to kill him, and travelled through Macedonia to Philippi. He sailed from Neapolis on the 15th April 57 A.D., and reached

Troas five days later. Here he met the delegates who had preceded him carrying contributions for the brethren at Jerusalem. On Sunday the 24th, the brethren met for the Agape, or "Love-feast," and whilst Paul was preaching near midnight, Eutychus, overcome by sleep, fell from the third story, and was taken up dead. He was restored to life by Paul, who, after going upstairs again and breaking bread, conversed till daybreak. He then left on foot for

Assos, a picturesque town on a crag which rises abruptly from the sea, and was once crowned by a temple of Athene. Entering by the Sacred Way, and descending the steep street to the little port, Paul embarked on a ship that had brought his companions round Cape Lectum from Troas. The ship, according to custom, stopped every evening when the breeze died out. The first day they reached

Mitylene, the chief town of the "noble and pleasant island" of Lesbos; and the next they crossed the mouth of the Gulf of Smyrna to a point on the mainland opposite Chios, the richest island of the Ægean. The following morning they ran across to Samos, and, after passing the night under the lee of the promontory of Trogyllium, reached

Miletus, which had not then quite lost its ancient prosperity. Here he summoned the Ephesian elders to meet him, and in a pathetic address bade them farewell: "Ye all shall see my face no more." From Miletus they ran across to Cos; they then sailed past Cnidos to Rhodes, and the following day reached Patara, where, according to the A.V., they trans-shipped. There is, however, reason to suppose that they continued to sail along the coast as far as

Myra, the great port for the direct cross-sea traffic. There they struck across the open sea, with a steady westerly breeze, and passing south of Cyprus, reached

Tyre, the famous fortified seaport of the Phœnicians. Here the ship stopped seven days to unload, and Paul was warned by the brethren, through the Spirit, not to go to Jerusalem. After a kindly farewell, kneeling down in prayer on the shore, they continued the voyage to Ptolemais, which under the name of Acre was afterwards to become famous in history. Here they landed, and the next day went on to the Great on the site of Strato's Tower. It was on the coast of Palestine, between Carmel and Jaffa, and had a fine artificial harbor, of which the outline is still visible. Here Paul and his companions stayed in the house of Philip the evangelist, whose daughters prophesied; and here Agabus, binding his feet and hands with Paul's girdle, foretold that the Jews would so bind its owner, and deliver him to the Gentiles. Resisting the persuasion of the brethren, Paul, "ready not to be bound only, but to die for the name of the Lord Jesus," went up to Jerusalem, traveling no doubt by the usual road through Antipatris. He and the delegates were welcomed on their arrival by the brethren, and on the following day they were formally received by James and the elders. Paul gave a detailed account of his missionary labors since he had last visited Jerusalem. After hearing his report and knowing how the Judaizers had misrepresented Paul's teachings, his friends advised Paul to take charge of four Jewish Christians who were under a vow, purify himself with them in the Temple, and pay their expenses. The next day Paul went with the Nazarites into the Temple and remained there until an offering had been made for each of them, and their long hair had been cut off and burned in the sacred fire.

The Temple, in which the scene now lies, consisted, like other temples of that age, of a temenos, or sacred enclosure, in which was the naos, or holy house, constituting, with its surrounding courts and cloisters, the Hieron or Temple. The sacred enclosure was buttressed by a wall, in places 170 feet high, which, even in its ruined state, is a magnificent specimen of mural masonry. The Temple was surrounded by cloisters of great magnificence, built by Herod, the one on the south side consisting of four rows of marble columns, 162 in all. Within the cloisters was a stone balustrade, which strangers were forbidden to pass under pain of death. To the north of the Temple, and within the temenos wall, was the Castle of Antonia, also built by Herod, in which the Roman garrison was quartered. The castle commanded the Temple, and was connected with it by cloisters.

Found built into the wall of a Moslem cemetery.

The inscription in Greek is as follows:—"No stranger is to enter within the balustrade round the Temple and inclosure. Whoever is caught will be responsible to himself for his death, which will ensue."

Certain Asiatic Jews, finding Paul in the Temple, stirred up the people against him, alleging that he had brought Greeks into the Temple (meaning Trophimus, whom they had seen with him in the city). An infuriated crowd rushed on the apostle, and dragged him outside the balustrade. The Levites at once shut the gates, and Paul would have been killed, had not Claudius Lysias, who commanded the garrison, run down from the Antonia with some officers and men, and saved him. As the soldiers were conducting him to the castle, he explained to Lysias in Greek that he was a Jew of Tarsus, and not the Egyptian leader of the Sicarii (murderers). He asked for and obtained leave to address the people; and, standing on the steps that led up to the castle, secured silence by speaking in Hebrew. The crowd listened attentively until he spoke of his mission to the Gentiles, when frantic shouts arose, and his hearers in their rage threw off their garments and cast dust into the air.

Lysias now ordered Paul to be brought into the castle and examined by torture; but when he heard that the apostle was a Roman citizen, he countermanded the examination. The next day Lysias, having called a meeting of the Sanhedrin, brought Paul down to the Council House, near one of the approaches to the Temple, and set him before them. Paul at this point gave the proceedings a new and entirely unexpected turn, by crying out: "I am a Pharisee, a son of Pharisees: touching the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question."

A dissension at once arose between the Pharisees and the Sadducees in the council, and the uproar became so great that Lysias sent soldiers down to bring Paul up again to the Antonia. The following day, Paul's nephew having disclosed a conspiracy of the Jews to murder his uncle, Lysias sent his prisoner, with an explanatory letter, to Felix, the procurator of Judæa, who resided at Cæsarea. A strong escort of horse and foot took Paul by night along the Roman road through Gophna to Antipatris, near the point where the road leaves the hills. Thence the infantry returned to Jerusalem, whilst the horsemen pushed rapidly across the maritime plain to Cæsarea. Felix, hearing that Paul was a Cilician, ordered him to be kept in Herod's prætorium. Five days later Ananias arrived with some members of the Sanhedrin, and an advocate, who from his name, Tertullus, was a Roman citizen, practising in the provincial law courts. At the trial before Felix, Tertullus brought forward the charges in a set speech, and accused Paul of being a ringleader of the Nazarenes and a profaner of the Temple. Paul made a courteous reply, refuting Tertullus step by step, and was remanded by the governor, who, from his long residence in Palestine, must have had some knowledge of the Christian religion. Paul was placed in charge of a centurion, and his friends were allowed to visit him.

Some few days later, Felix, who, according to Tacitus, "exercised the authority of a king with the disposition of a slave, with all cruelty and lust," and his wife Drusilla, sister of Herod Agrippa II. (who had left her first husband, Aziz, king of Emesa), sent for Paul. But when the apostle "reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come," the Roman libertine was terrified, and dismissed him abruptly. Felix afterwards often sent for Paul, hoping to obtain a bribe for his release; but failing in this, kept him in prison for two years, until his successor, Porcius Festus, arrived.

The new governor, on reaching Jerusalem, was asked to send Paul to the city for trial, the Jews intending to kill him on his way. But Festus decided to hold an inquiry at Cæsarea, and as a result Paul claimed his right as a Roman citizen to be tried by the supreme tribunal of the emperor at Rome. When after some days Herod Agrippa II., king of Chalcis, with his sister Bernice, arrived at Cæsarea, Festus consulted him with regard to Paul, and, Agrippa having expressed a wish to hear the apostle, fixed an interview for the next day. Agrippa and Bernice having entered the audience-chamber with great pomp, Paul was brought in, and gave a narrative of his conversion, and alluded to the prophets, Moses, and the doctrine of the resurrection. In the midst of his discourse he was interrupted by Festus with an ironical remark; but he appealed to Agrippa, who replied, "With but little persuasion thou wouldst fain make me a Christian." Paul's reply was a last, solemn appeal. Thus the conference ended.

After retiring and discussing the case, Agrippa and Festus came to the conclusion that Paul might have been released if he had not appealed unto Cæsar. But the appeal had been made; and at the first opportunity Paul was sent with other prisoners to Rome, in charge of a centurion of the Augustan cohort, or "Officer-Courier Corps." He was accompanied by Luke and Aristarchus, and was treated as a man of distinction and a Roman citizen.

The Voyage.—They embarked in an Adramyttian ship engaged in the coasting trade, and after touching at Sidon, where Paul was allowed to visit his friends, they sailed under the lee of Cyprus, and crossed to Myra. Here they transshipped into one of the large ships that carried corn from Alexandria to Rome. After sailing slowly along the coast for many days, on account of light, baffling winds, they came opposite Cnidus, and not being able to hold on the usual course to the south point of the Morea, as the wind was blowing from the west or north-west, they ran for Crete. After rounding Cape Salmone, the eastern point of the island, they worked their way with difficulty along the south coast to Fair Havens, a roadstead, not far from Lasea, which still retains its ancient name. At this place, the nearest shelter east of Cape Matala, they remained until the Fast of Expiation (which in 59 A.D. fell on the 5th October) had passed. The dangerous season for navigation had now commenced, and it became a question whether they should winter at Fair Havens or seek a better harbor. Paul strongly advised them to remain; but the centurion was guided by the sailing-master and the captain of the ship, and selected Phenice. When a light southerly breeze sprang up, they set sail; but the ship had barely rounded Cape Matala when it was caught in a typhonic wind, called Euroclydon (Acts 27. 14), which struck down from the Cretan mountains that towered above them to a height of 7,000 feet.

The ship was obliged to run before the wind (ENE.); and when she came into smoother water, under the lee of Clauda, the crew with difficulty hoisted in the boat, and passed ropes round the ship's frame to hold her straining timbers together. At the same time, fearing lest they should be driven into the Syrtis, or "Great Quicksands," they brought the ship's head as near as possible to the wind, and lay-to under sufficient canvas to keep her steady. In this condition the ship drifted through

Adria, the sea that lies between Malta, Italy, Greece, and Crete. On the first day the freight was thrown overboard, and on the second the crew and passengers joined in throwing the spare gear into the sea. Then followed days of anxiety, during which all hope of being saved was abandoned; but they were sustained by the cheering courage of Paul, who had been promised in a vision that all should be saved.

On the fourteenth night, after drifting about 476 miles, the seamen, hearing probably the breakers on a low rocky point of Malta called Kâra, suspected they were nearing land. They sounded, and finding the water shoaling, let go four anchors by the stern. Day was anxiously awaited, and when it broke they lightened the ship by throwing the wheat into the sea. They then ran her aground at a spot which has been reasonably identified with a neck of land projecting towards the island of Salmonetta, which shelters St. Paul's Bay on the north-west.

Malta. All escaped safe to land, and were treated with great kindness by the "barbarians"—i.e. by the people of non-Greek birth—who lived on the island. Paul, whilst laying a bundle of sticks on the fire, was bitten by a viper, but was unhurt, and was therefore taken by the people to be a god. He rewarded Publius the chief man's hospitality by healing his father of a fever, and cured all who had diseases. In February 60 A.D., after three months' stay, they sailed for Rome in a ship called The Twin Brothers—i.e. the Castor and Pollux. The ship put into the lovely land-locked harbour of Syracuse, and here they remained three days. Possibly Paul landed and preached, for tradition regards him as the founder of the Sicilian church. They then beat up to Rhegium, and, waiting one day for a south wind to carry them through the straits, ran before the wind to Puteoli, on the northern shore of the bay of Naples. This place was an important trading city of the time, with a great harbour, extensive docks, and a long mole, of which there are still remains. Christianity had already established itself at this busy port, and Paul remained seven days with the brethren. They then travelled along the

Appian Way, the "queen of roads," to the capital, and crossing (Acts 28. 14) the boundary of the territory of Rome (ager Romanus), reached the market of Appius (Appii Forum). There, and at The Three Taverns further on, Paul was encouraged by meeting brethren who had come to welcome him from Rome. The party entered the city by the Porta Capena, and the centurion at once handed his prisoners over to the stratopedarch, or "chief of the camp" of soldiers from abroad, who were encamped on the Cœlian Hill. Paul was treated with great leniency, and was allowed to live in his own hired house, his wrist fastened by a light chain to that of the soldier who guarded him. Here he remained for two years, "preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching the things concerning the Lord Jesus Christ with all boldness;" and here, probably in the early part of 61 A.D., he wrote the Epistles to Philemon, the Colossians, and the Ephesians.

Towards the close of 61 A.D. he was tried, and there was some prospect of acquittal when he wrote to the Philippians (2. 24). Before Paul reached Rome, some of Cæsar's household had been converted; and it is supposed by Lightfoot that some of the slaves of Aristobulus (son of Herod the Great) and of Narcissus (Claudius' favorite freedman) had passed into the imperial household, and were saluted by the apostle as Christians (Rom. 16. 10, 11).

During the early part of Nero's reign, Seneca, his old tutor, exercised great influence, and the liberal policy of the empire with regard to religion was probably largely due to his broad views. This policy possibly had some influence on the trial which ended in the acquittal of Paul. He was found innocent in the eyes of the Roman imperial law, and his acquittal was equivalent to a formal decision by the supreme court of the empire that it was permissible to preach Christianity.

After his liberation, Paul probably travelled through Macedonia to Philippi (Phil. 2. 24), and thence via Troas to Ephesus, from which place he may have visited the churches at Colossæ, Laodicea, Pergamum, etc. (Philem. 22). Possibly he may then have gone to Spain, and after his return have visited Macedonia (1 Tim. 1. 3), whence he wrote the First Epistle to Timothy, to whom he had committed the care of the Ephesian church. Shortly afterwards he returned to Ephesus, and went to Crete (Tit. 1. 5) with Titus, whom he left in charge of the Cretan church. Returning again to Ephesus, he wrote the Epistle to Titus, expressing his intention to winter at Nicopolis (Tit. 3. 12). On leaving Ephesus he went to Miletus, where Trophimus became too ill to proceed; and thence to Corinth, where Erastus remained (2 Tim. 4. 20). He may possibly have passed the winter at Nicopolis—a town founded by Augustus in memory of the victory of Actium—and have been there arrested, probably in 66 A.D., and again sent to

THE ROMAN FORUM. (From a Photograph.)

Rome. The second trial followed, with all its gloomy surroundings. After the disgrace of Seneca, the spirit which animated the administration changed. Paul's confinement was more rigorous: he was treated as a malefactor (2 Tim. 2. 9); his friends could visit him with difficulty (2 Tim. 1. 16); and at his first hearing "no man stood by" him, "but all forsook" him. Nevertheless he spoke with his usual boldness, and for the moment "was delivered out of the lion's mouth."

It has been plausibly conjectured that the first charge against which he successfully defended himself was complicity with the incendiaries who burned Rome in 64 A.D.; and the defection of his friends may have been due to the dismay caused by the barbarous persecution of the Christians that followed the conflagration. Paul was remanded to prison; but he has no hope of acquittal, and looks forward with calmness to the end. "I am already being offered, and the time of my departure is come."

When he wrote his last glorious Epistle to Timothy, Luke was the only one of his companions who remained with him. He did not expect the final sentence to be passed until the following winter (2 Tim. 4. 21); but we do not know whether Timothy was able to join him before his death, or what was the date of his martyrdom. According to tradition, he suffered in the reign of Nero, possibly in 68 A.D., and was beheaded with the sword, "without the gate," on the road to Ostia, not far from the church which bears his name.

PEARLS [pĕarls], found in the pearl-oyster in the Red Sea and Indian Ocean, are not mentioned in the Old Testament; for "pearls" in Job 28. 18 read "crystal" (R.V.). In the New Testament they are frequently referred to (Mat. 7. 6; 13. 45, etc.).

PENTATEUCH [pĕn'tȧ-teūch] (Gr. "five books"), the five books of Moses in the Old Testament. The Jews named these, from their chief contents, Torah ("Law"); and the Greek translators gave each book its distinctive title; hence the names in our Bible: Genesis ("origin," i.e. of the world and of men); Exodus ("departure," i.e. of the Israelites from Egypt); Leviticus (the book of the law of the priests); Numbers (from the numberings of the people related in it); Deuteronomy ("second Law"). The authorship of the Pentateuch has been the subject of much controversy. The unbelieving critics of the Bible have conceded to Moses only a small share in the composition of these books, some denying that he wrote any part of them. However, it is so expressly mentioned in many places that Moses wrote the Law at Divine command, so frequently are the Five Books quoted in the New Testament, and by our Lord Himself, as the work of Moses, that to deny his authorship is to destroy the credibility not only of the Pentateuch but of the Bible as a whole.

PENTECOST [pĕn'tê-cŏst]. [See FEASTS.]

PERGAMOS [pĕr'ga-mŏs]. Also PERGAMUM (Rev. 2. 12-17), a town of Asia Minor, in the valley of the Caicus. Near the top of its acropolis hill, 1,000 feet above the valley, are the ruins of the temple of Rome and Augustus, which Ramsay identifies with the "throne of Satan" (Rev. 2. 13).

PERIZZITES [pĕr'iz-zītes] the "villagers" or agricultural population of Canaan, corresponding to modern fellahin; name of a Canaanite tribe.

PERSIANS [pĕr'shans]. The Persians were originally a Median tribe which settled in Persia, on the eastern side of the Persian Gulf. They were Aryans, their language belonging to the eastern division of the Indo-European group. One of their chiefs, Teispes, conquered Elam in the time of the decay of the Assyrian Empire, and established himself in the district of Anzan. His descendants branched off into two lines—one line ruling in Anzan, while the other remained in Persia. Cyrus II., king of Anzan, finally united the divided power, conquered Media, Lydia, and Babylonia, and carried his arms into the far East. His son, Cambyses, added Egypt to the empire, which, however, fell to pieces after his death. It was reconquered and thoroughly organized by Darius, son of Hystaspes, whose dominions extended from India to the Danube. Scripture mentions Cyrus, who released the captive Jews (Ezra 1. 1); Darius, who confirmed the decree of Cyrus (Ezra 6. 1); and Artaxerxes (Ezra 4. 7; 7. 1).

PESHITO [pĕ-shĭt'ô]. The Syriac version of the Bible, otherwise called the Peshito (which means either simple or vulgate), belongs to the third century. The Old Testament part was made direct from the Hebrew, with occasional reference to the Septuagint, as early as the first century. It was very likely made in the first instance for Jewish proselytes.

There is another Syriac version made directly from the Septuagint as it stood in the Hexapla of Origen.

PETER [pē'ter], ST. (Gr. "rock"), surname of that Simon, son of John, and brother of Andrew, who, originally a fisherman near Capernaum, became the first apostle of Jesus. His character vacillates between obstinate resolution and momentary cowardice, as is shown in the story of his denial of his Master. In St. Paul's letters he appears as a "pillar" of the primitive Church and the "Apostle of the Circumcision" (Gal. 2. 8, 9). He was married (Mat. 8. 14; Mark 1. 30; Luke 4. 38), and was accompanied by his wife on his journeys (1 Cor. 9. 5). Papal claims of primacy for St. Peter have appealed for support to Mat. 16. 17-19; Luke 22. 32; and John 21. 15-17; but are set aside by such passages as Mat. 20. 20-28; Mark 9. 35; 10. 35-45; Luke 9. 48; 22. 26.

St. Peter is not mentioned in the Acts after the council at Jerusalem (50 A.D.), but Gal. 2. 11 refers to a subsequent visit by him to Antioch. His history after that incident has been overlaid with legends. It is impossible that he spent twenty-five years in Rome, though it is probable that his last years were passed there, and that he there suffered martyrdom. It is less probable that he and St. Paul were put to death at the same time. If "Babylon" (in 1 Pet. 5. 13) is not, as some suppose, a mystical name for Rome, Babylon was the scene of his labor at some period after the visit to Antioch.

The First Epistle of St. Peter was written either from Babylon or Rome, probably in 63 or 64 A.D. St. Mark was with him when he wrote it (5. 13).

To the Second Epistle of St. Peter two objections have been raised: (1) that ch. 2 closely resembles St. Jude. But dependence on St. Jude would not disprove that St. Peter wrote it. (2) That St. Paul's epistles are referred to (3. 15, 16). But this would not involve a date later than the apostolic age. This epistle was probably written just before the death of the apostle (1. 13-15), about the same time as 2 Timothy (66 and 68 A.D.).

PETRA (pē'trâ), the Roman name of the Nabathæan city, close to Mount Hor, called Sela in the Old Testament. It was colonized by the Romans in 23 A.D.; but the rock-cut tombs and theatre are probably later.

PHARAOH [phâ'raōh]. For the origin and meaning of the word, see article on EGYPT. Three Pharaohs are mentioned in Scripture by name:

1. Pharaoh Hophra. (Jer. 44. 30). He reigned over Egypt from 589 B.C. to 570 B.C. He yielded to the overtures of Zedekiah of Judah, who thought Hophra's accession a good opportunity for throwing off the yoke of Babylon. So, as Ezekiel says (17. 15), "he rebelled against him [Nebuchadrezzar] in sending his ambassadors into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people." The move, which had been carried through against the advice of Jeremiah, proved fatal to Zedekiah and his kingdom. The Egyptians did indeed march to the relief of Judah, but returned without meeting the Chaldeans in pitched battle, and Jerusalem was taken, the walls broken down, and the Temple burnt with fire. A remnant of Judah fled to Egypt, carrying the prophet Jeremiah with them. They settled at Tahpanhes. Here Jeremiah prophesied a victory of Nebuchadrezzar over Egypt. The prophecy was fulfilled when Nebuchadrezzar marched into the Delta 568 B.C. In 1909 the palace of Pharaoh Hophra was discovered at Memphis. As Jeremiah prophesied (44. 29f), Hophra became the victim of a revolt, and was finally strangled.

2. Pharaoh Necho (R. V. Neco. 2 Ki. 23. 29, 33, 34; 2 Chr. 35. 22 etc.), the Nekau II of the monuments, was the second king of the Twenty-sixth Dynasty and reigned over Egypt from 610 to 594 B.C. The great event of his reign was his expedition across Syria to secure for himself a share of the decaying empire of Assyria. He had to pass through the territory of Judah, and he desired to have Josiah, its king, as an ally. Josiah declined to enter into this relation and endeavored to stop Necho's invasion. The armies met at Megiddo, 608 B.C., where Josiah was mortally wounded and soon after died. Necho marched northward and penetrated to the Euphrates. He deposed Jehoahaz, whom the people had anointed king, and set his brother Jehoiakim on the throne as the vassal of Egypt. The presence of Necho in Syria attracted the attention of the newly established power at Babylon. At Carchemish (604 B.C.), Nebuchadrezzar inflicted on the Egyptians a signal defeat, which made the Chaldeans undisputed masters of Western Asia. Egypt had lost all its Asiatic possessions.

Pharaoh Necho advanced the commercial development of Egypt by building a great navy. He had two fleets, one in the Mediterranean, the other in the Red Sea. His ships were the first to circumnavigate Africa.

3. Shishak. [See SHISHAK.]

PHARISEES [phăr'ĭ-sees] (Heb. "separatists"), the name given (like "Puritans") by their opponents to the party that arose among the Jewish scribes after the victory of the Maccabees, and devoted themselves to the most scrupulous fulfilment of the Law as expounded by the scribes. They called themselves "neighbors" (i. e. fellow-members of the true Israel; cf. Luke 10. 29, 36), distinguishing themselves not only from the non-Jewish "people of the land," but even from "the multitude" of Israel (John 7. 49; Luke 5. 30-32; 7. 39; cf. 10. 29ff.). They were thus strictly a sect (Acts 15. 5; 26. 5), in Herod's time numbering over 6,000, affording a pattern to all thorough Jews and moulding their ideals through the synagogues (Matt. 23. 2-7). Seeking to make religion supreme in the entire life of the nation, they were confronted by the Sadducees, who excluded it from politics. But believing righteousness to be the correct performance of prescribed righteous acts (Matt. 6. 1, 2), chiefly in order to secure ritual purity, they lost sight of the real end through self-centered absorption in the traditional means, and fell (for the most part) into censoriousness and hypocrisy (Luke 12. 1). Jesus pitied their blindness, except when wilful (Luke 16. 14 ff.; John 5. 39 ff.; 8. 39-41; 12. 42 ff.); and still more the slavery of the people under the yoke of their traditions (Matt. 11. 28-30; Mark 7. 3-13). The Pharisees expected a Messiah who would save Israel by carnal power, but their main weakness lay in their ignorance of God's free grace, and expectation of reward as the payment of a debt. They kept alive in the nation the veneration of the law and hope of the resurrection, but were blinded by a carnal prejudice to the fulfilment of both in Jesus Christ.

PHILEMON [phī-lē'mon], the receiver of the short epistle of St. Paul which bears his name, in which he is requested to receive again to his favor his runaway slave Onesimus ("Profitable"). He lived at Colossæ (Col. 4. 9), where his house was the meeting-place of the Christian community (ver. 2).

PHILIP [phĭl'ĭp] (Gr. "lover of horses").—(1) A son of Herod the Great by Cleopatra; was tetrarch of Batanæa, Gaulonitis, Trachonitis, and Ituræa, and the founder of Cæsarea Philippi. After his death his lands were united to the Roman province of Syria (Luke 3. 1). (2) A son of Herod the Great and Mariamne, whose wife Herodias became the wife of Herod Antipas (Mat. 14. 3; Mark 6. 17). (3) The apostle, born, like Andrew and Peter, at Bethsaida (Mat. 10. 3; Mark 3. 18; Luke 6. 14; Acts 1. 13), was early called by our Lord, and brought Nathanael to Him (John 1. 43 ff.). His little faith was manifested on the occasion of the miraculous feeding of the multitude (John 6. 5); the Greek Jews at the feast, who desired to see Jesus, applied to him (John 12. 20 ff.); he interrupted the farewell discourse of Jesus with the words, "Show us the Father, and it sufficeth us" (John 14. 8). Nothing else is known of him, except the tradition that he was a missionary in Phrygia and suffered death at Hierapolis. (4) One of the Seven (Acts 6. 5), labored as an evangelist in Samaria (8. 5), instructed and baptized the Ethiopian treasurer (8. 26 ff.), and made the seaport town of Cæsarea the centre of his work (8. 40; 21. 8).

PHILIPPIANS [phĭ-lĭp'pi-ans], the Epistle to the, was written while St. Paul was in prison in

Ruins at Philippi. (From a Photograph by Bonfils.)

Rome (Phil. 1. 13–17; 4. 22). Philippi was an important town of Macedonia on the great highway from East to West. Philip II. of Macedonia had named it after himself. In St. Paul's time it was a Roman "colony" (Acts 16. 12)—i.e. a settlement of veteran soldiers (cf. Acts 16. 35, 36, 38). From Philippi, where he had been at first grievously maltreated (Acts 16. 22 ff.; cf. Phil. 1. 30 and 1 Thes. 2. 2), he "once and again" received pecuniary aid (Phil. 4. 16). The epistle was written to acknowledge the receipt of such a gift. It is "the most epistolary of all the epistles;" in it the apostle pours out his heart to his friends, and entreats them to be "of one accord, one mind" (1. 27 to 2. 11; 4. 2, 3).

PHILISTINES [phĭ-lĭs'tĭnes], the possessors of Philistia, the coast-land from Sharon to the Egyptian desert, with its five cities, Gaza, Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, and Gath, which had belonged to Egypt up to the closing days of the Nineteenth Dynasty. Though not of the Semitic race, they adopted the Semitic language of Canaan. They came from Caphtor (Crete).

PHŒNICIA [phē-nĭ'ci-ȧ], a strip of the Mediterranean coast, stretching northward from Mount Carmel for 120 miles, with an average breadth of 20 miles (Acts 21. 2). It has been called "the England of antiquity," because of its commercial greatness. Tyre and Sidon, Gebal and Arvad, were its chief cities. The Phœnicians founded many colonies, of which Carthage was the chief.

PHYLACTERIES [phȳ-lăc'tēr-ies] (Gr. "armulets"), in Mat. 23. 5. [See Frontlets.]

PILATE [pī'late], PONTIUS [pŏn'ti-us], was the fifth of the seven Roman procurators who from 6 to 41 A.D. ruled Judæa, with Samaria and Idumæa. He was procurator for ten years, from 26 to 36 A.D. The Jewish historian Philo quotes a letter of Agrippa I., which calls him a man of "unbending and recklessly hard character," and charges his administration with "corruptibility, violence, robberies, ill-treatment of the people, grievances, continuous executions without even the form of a trial, endless and intolerable cruelties." He often needlessly and intentionally wounded the religious feelings of the Jews. He made the garrison of Jerusalem enter the city by night with the figures of the emperor on their standards. These images, because they were objects of worship, were an abomination to the Jewish people, who in crowds proceeded to Cæsarea and demanded their removal. Finding violent means useless, Pilate yielded. The massacre referred to in Luke 13. 1 is another proof of his cruelty. Convinced of the innocence of Jesus, he lacked the moral strength to act according to his conscience, and was constrained by his fear of the people's fanaticism (Mark 15. 15; Luke 23. 24) and of the emperor's disfavor (John 19. 12) to deliver Him to be crucified. The unrest caused among the Jews by his arbitrary and violent rule led Vitellius, the governor of Syria, to send him to Rome to give an account of his actions to the Emperor Tiberius. He did not reach Rome till 37, after the death of Tiberius. According to the historian Eusebius, Pilate died by his own hand.

PINE [pīne] TREE occurs twice in Isaiah (41. 19; 60. 13) as the translation of tidhar. It is associated with the fir and the box. The revisers suggest "plane," and this is probably what is meant.

POETRY [pō'ĕt-rȳ] OF THE BIBLE.

I. Its form.—The most characteristic mark is the parallelism of the members of the several verses—i.e. while the lines are usually similar in length and structure, there is nearly always a formal unity of thought between them. Thus the verses of Lamech (Gen. 4. 23, 24) mark themselves off plainly from the prose narrative preceding.

Parallelism is of various kinds, which are, however, frequently interchanged. They are distinguished as—

1. SYNONYMOUS (as in Ps. 21. 1, 2; Job 8. 5), where the parallel lines express ideas exactly the same or nearly similar.

2. PROGRESSIVE (as in Ps. 23. 1; Prov. 29. 22), where the succeeding line or lines develop the thought of the first.

3. ANTITHETIC (as in Ps. 1. 6; Prov. 1. 7), where the thought first stated is illustrated by its antithesis.

4. SYNTHETIC OR CONSTRUCTIVE as in Ps. 25. 12; Prov. 26. 4), where an entirely new idea is introduced in the second or following lines.

5. CLIMACTIC (as in Ps. 121. 3, 4; 29. 8)—a modification of No. 2—where characteristic words are repeated in a second or third line, so as to complete or supplement the sense.

6. COMPARATIVE (as in Ps. 42. 1; Prov. 15. 16, and many other proverbs), where the form is intermediate between Nos. 1 and 3, or Nos. 1 and 2.

While the parallel verses constitute, as a rule, the only stanza or strophe, there are examples of groups of verses in the same poem, each ending with a refrain. A perfect specimen is Ps. 42 and 43, which are one poem. Similar, though not so perfect, is Ps. 107. Ps. 119 is symmetrically divided into 22 parts of 8 verses each, all the verses of each group beginning with the same letter in the Hebrew. There are several other alphabetic or acrostic psalms.

The individual verses are usually distichs. Tristichs are not uncommon in the Psalms (e.g. Ps. 22. 23, 24, 26, 29; 24. 4, 7 ff.), and in Job (e.g. ch. 21. 17, 33; 24. 5, 12, 18). Tetrastichs are rare, but Ps. 37 has them almost throughout. Pentastichs are also found in Ps. 37. 7, 8; 25. 26.

The above examples are taken from the strictly poetical parts of the Old Testament. In the prophetic literature, which is largely poetical also, there is much more freedom and variety, and all the principal forms of parallelism may be found within the compass of a few verses, as in Isa. 25. 1–9. Nor is there any practical limit to the number of stichs in a single verse in the poetry of the prophets.

The New Testament also contains poetry of the Hebrew type, e.g. Mat. 8. 20. Mat. 25. 34–36 is influenced by the old poetic style.

II. Its matter.—1. The poetry of the Bible has throughout the stamp of religion—the religion of Jehovah. 2. It is simple and lucid. 3. It is universal. Its themes are of world-wide significance, embracing, like the historical and prophetical books, the plan of God for the salvation of the human race.

It embraces—1. LYRICAL POETRY, extending over at least a thousand years, and including, besides the Psalms, such lyrical poems as the blessing of Jacob (Gen. 49), Miriam's song (Ex. 15), the songs of Moses (Deut. 32, 33), the song of Deborah (Judg. 5), the "Song of the Bow" (2 Sam. 1), and the hymn of Hezekiah (Isa. 38).

2. DIDACTIC POETRY: either gnomic (consisting of maxims), as in the greater part of the book of Proverbs, or reflective, as in ch. 1 to 9 and 31 of Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and many Psalms, e.g. Ps. 14, 37, 49, 50, 78, 104–106, 139.

3. SEMI-DRAMATIC POETRY: the book of Job and the Song of Songs.

4. ELEGIAC POETRY: Lamentations, and several elegies in the prophetic writings.

POMEGRANATE [pŏme'grăn-ăte], a favorite fruit of Egypt (Num. 20. 5) and Palestine (Deut. 8. 8). It was imitated in ornaments on the high priest's robe (Ex. 28. 33, 34), and in Solomon's Temple (1 Kings 7. 18).

PRIESTS [prēsts] were ministers at the altar, descendants of Aaron, to whose family the priestly office was restricted by the Levitical legislation. In later times they traced their descent from the priestly family of Zadok, the contemporary of David. The priest was subject to special laws (Lev. 10. 8 ff.). His duties were mainly three: to minister at the Sanctuary, to teach the people, and to communicate the divine will. His dress, of white linen, consisted of (1) short breeches; (2) a coat without seam, reaching to the ankles; (3) a girdle; (4) a cap shaped like a cup. The priests were divided by David into twenty-four courses, each course usually officiating for a week at a time. The "second priest" of 2 Kings 25. 18 was probably the same as the "ruler of the house of God" (2 Chr. 31. 13; Neh. 11. 11) and the "captain of the temple" (Acts 4. 1; 5. 24). As teachers of the people the priests were superseded, first by the prophets, afterwards by the scribes. The "chief priests" of the New Testament were the acting high-priest, former high-priests still living, and members of these privileged families.

The HIGH-PRIEST was the spiritual chief of the nation. The head of the house of Aaron held this office. He was subject to special laws (Lev. 21). His special duties were to oversee the Sanctuary, its service, and its treasures; to perform the service of the day of atonement (q.v.), when he was required to enter the Holy of Holies; and to consult God by Urim and Thummim (q.v.). It was after the Exile, and when Israel was under foreign domination, that the high-priest became also the political representative of the nation. His official garments, besides those common to the priests, were: 1. The ephod, or shoulder-dress of blue, purple, scarlet, and fine linen, interwoven with gold thread; 2. The breastplate, of the same material, which had, outside, twelve precious stones set in gold in four rows, each bearing the name of a tribe of Israel, and, inside, the breastplate, Urim and Thummim; 3. The sleeveless robe of the ephod, of dark blue, with a fringe of pomegranates and bells; 4. The mitre, a turban, with a gold plate inscribed "Holy to Jehovah" (see Ex. 38; 39; Lev. 16).

PROPHETS [prŏph'ĕts]. The books which, in the Hebrew Bible, immediately follow the Pentateuch, are the books of Joshua, Judges, Samuel, and Kings, which give a connected history of the nation from the death of Moses to the Babylonian Captivity, and all the books which we call prophetical, with the exception of Daniel. [See OLD TESTAMENT CANON.]

The "former prophets" are so called simply from their position.

Among the latter prophets, the "Twelve," which are now usually termed minor prophets, have always gone together and been reckoned as one book, owing to their limited compass, which admitted of their being written on one roll.

The title "Prophets" is given to this whole addition, the historical books being written in a prophetic spirit, and presumably by prophetic men; but we have no precise notice of the circumstances under which the addition was made. It must have been after the time of Malachi. The earliest available notices on the subject speak of the Law and the Prophets together, or give clear indication that the prophetical books were then in the Canon. Thus Jesus Sirach (somewhere about 200 B.C.) speaks of the "twelve prophets" (usually called the minor prophets) in such a way as to leave no doubt that these twelve writings were then, as now, classed together; and his grandson (about 132 B.C.) speaks of his grandfather being familiar with "the Law and the Prophets, and the other books which follow them." After a time, though it is impossible to fix a date for the beginning of the practice, it was customary to read parts of the prophetical Scriptures in the stated worship, a section being assigned to accompany the lesson of the Law for the day.

It is not possible to fix the time when the last addition was made to Scripture, and the Canon closed. After the Law and the Prophets there remained a considerable number of books, some of which are certainly earlier in date than some of the books that had been included. It is most probable that some of the psalms at least had been in use in the public worship from the time of David. Nor is there any valid reason for doubting that the books of Ezra and Nehemiah come from the hands of the men whose names they bear.

The three books, Psalms, Proverbs, and Job, are taken together and provided with a special system of accentual marks for cantillation. It is misleading to speak of them as the poetical books, for some of the other books, e.g. The Song of Songs and Lamentations, have an equal claim to the title, and many portions of the prophetical books are in the form of poetry.

Daniel, though a prophetical book in every sense, was not put along with the other prophets, the most probable explanation being that this writer was placed in the third part of the Canon because, while he had the prophetic gift, he did not hold the prophetic office.

PROSELYTES [prŏs'ĕ-lytes] (Gr. "new-comers," "adherents"). Gentile converts to Judaism, were of two classes or degrees: (1) those who, to all intents and purposes, became Jews by the three rites of circumcision, baptism, and sacrifice—the "proselytes" of Mat. 23. 15, Acts 2. 10; (2) the "devout" or "God-fearing" persons who renounced idolatry, attended the synagogue, kept the Sabbath and avoided gross forms of pollution (Acts 17. 4; cf. 15. 20, 21).

PROVERBS [prŏv'ĕrbs], the Book of, consisting of:—

I. A preface, stating its object (1. 1-7);

II. Discourses in praise of Wisdom (1. 8—9. 18, in ch. 8 Wisdom herself being speaker);

III. "Proverbs of Solomon," 374 in number (ch. 10. 1—22. 16);

IV. "Words of the Wise" (22. 17—24. 22), and "Sayings of the Wise" (24. 23-34);

V. Further "Proverbs of Solomon" (25—29);

VI. Two small pieces closely connected (30 and 31. 1-9);

VII. An acrostic poem on the "virtuous," i.e. the good or capable wife (31. 10-31).

The Book of Proberbs belongs to the department of Hebrew literature called the Wisdom, and was written, as it claims to be (1. 1), by King Solomon. Hebrew wisdom differed from the philosophy of other peoples in the point from which it set out. The Hebrew thinker's task was not to discover a God whom he did not know, but to recognize in all things God whom he knew. Hence the Wisdom became greatly a doctrine of providence—a justification of the ways of God to man.

The fundamental idea of the Wisdom is that the world is a moral constitution. Under all its phenomena, and within all human history, there is a living God fulfilling Himself, His thoughts, and His will (20. 29; 16. 31; 10. 27).

The various ranks of society, which are the ordinance of God, the wise man observes with reverent feeling (14. 31; 10. 17). He inculcates humility before God, gentleness and consideration towards men, gravity of deportment, thoughtful reflection, and slowness to speak (22. 4; 20. 9; 15. 1; 11. 2, 10, 12, 18; see also 14. 17; 16. 32; 15. 28; 15. 2; 10. 14).

To the wise man the mind and thought of God are reflected in all things, especially in the social order and moral life of man. In ch. 1-9, and particularly in ch. 8, this general world-conception, especially on its moral side, is personified as a being, called Wisdom herself. Then this Divine conception, Wisdom, is conceived as projected out of the mind of God, and having existence beside God (8. 24 ff.). And finally this Wisdom was God's artificer in the creation of all things. This profound idea was taken up among the other Messianic thoughts of Israel, and was afterwards realized in the Son of God (cf. John 1 1-3; Col. 1. 17).

PSALMS [psälms], the Book of (Heb. "Book of Praises"), stands first among the "Writings" of the Old Testament (cf. Luke 24. 44, where "the Psalms" stand for "the Writings"). See HAGIOGRAPHA.

The Hebrew Psalter is divided into five books, ending with Ps. 41, 72, 89, 106, 150 respectively Each book ends with a doxology.

Many of the Psalms have ancient titles. These are:—

I. Titles indicating Character.—"Psalm" is prefixed to fifty-seven; "Song," to thirty; "Maschil" (perhaps = skilful psalm), to thirteen; "Michtam," to six; "A Prayer," to five (17, 86, 90, 102, 142); "A Praise," to Ps. 145 only; and "Shiggaion" (perhaps = dithyrambic; cf. Shigionoth, Hab. 3. 1), to Ps. 7.

II. Titles giving Musical Directions.—1. "To" or "For the chief Musician," prefixed to fifty-five psalms, most of which bear the name of David.

2. Many refer to Musical Instruments:—

(a) "On Neginoth" (4, 6, 54, 55, 67, 76), on stringed instruments; (b) "Upon Neginah" (Ps. 61), on a stringed instrument; (c) "Upon Nehiloth" (Ps. 5), on wind instruments, probably flutes; (d) "Upon Alamoth" (Ps. 46), probably, in the manner of maidens; soprano; (e) "Upon Sheminith;" R.V., "set to the Sheminith," or the eighth, i.e. an octave lower (Ps. 6, 12), probably tenor or bass (cf. 1 Chr. 15. 19-21); (f) "Upon Gittith" (Ps. 8, 81, 84); R.V., "set to the Gittith" (= of Gath), may refer either to the instrument or the melody; (g) "To Jeduthun;" R.V., "after the manner of Jeduthun" (Ps. 62, 77), David's chief musician.

Selah probably indicates a louder accompaniment, or an instrumental interlude.

3. Others appear to be taken from Names of Tunes or from the first Words of Songs:—

Ps. 9 set to Muth-labben; Ps. 22 to "The hind of the morning;" Ps. 45, 69 to "Lilies;" Ps. 60 to "The lily of testimony;" Ps. 80 to "Lilies, a testimony;" Ps. 56 to "The silent dove of them afar," or "The dove of the far terebinths;" Ps. 57, 58, 59, 75 to "Destroy not;" Ps. 53 to Mahalath (unknown); Ps. 88 to Mahalath Leannoth (unknown).

III. Titles of Liturgical Use.—In the second Temple each day of the week had its own psalms sung at morning and evening sacrifice.

Ps. 92 is "a Psalm or Song for the Sabbath day."

The LXX. gives Ps. 24 for the first day, Ps. 48 for the second, Ps. 94 for the fourth, Ps. 93 for the sixth; while the Talmud gives Ps. 82 for the third day, and the LXX. Ps. 81 for the fifth.

Ps. 38 and Ps. 70 have the title "to bring to remembrance;" Ps. 100, "a psalm of thanksgiving;" Ps. 30, "a song at the dedication of the house" (probably for the Feast of Dedication); Ps. 60, "to teach" (cf. Deut. 31. 19 and 2 Sam. 1 18), to be learned by heart and recited; Ps. 120-134 (fifteen), "a song of degrees," "a song of the ascents," probably sung by pilgrims going up to Jerusalem (cf. 1 Sam. 1-3; Ps. 122. 4; also Isa. 30. 29; Ps. 42. 4).

IV. Titles of Authorship:—

(a) Ps. 90, "Moses;" (b) Seventy-three psalms, "David;" (c) Two (72, 127), "Solomon;" (d) Twelve (50. 73-83), "Asaph;" (e) Eleven (42 with 43. 44-49, 84, 85, 87, 88) "Sons of Korah;" (f) One each (88 and 89) to the sages Heman and Ethan the Ezrahites. But 88 is also connected with the sons of Korah.

V. Titles of Occasion.—Thirteen "Psalms of David":—

Ps. 7, 34, 52, 54, 56, 57, 59, 142, are referred to the persecution by Saul; Ps. 18 to David's deliverance and victory; Ps. 60 to the war with Edom; Ps. 51 to David's fall; Ps. 3 and 63 to his flight from Absalom.

The liturgical titles probably represent the usage of the second Temple. Those that are musical probably date from before the Exile.

THE AUTHORSHIP AND DATE OF THE PSALMS. The dates of the Psalms, as must be obvious from what has been said respecting the authors, are very various, ranging from the time of Moses to that of the Captivity—a period of nearly 1000 years. In the period of the Captivity were evidently written such laments as Psa. 74, 79, 126, 137.

CANONICITY. The inspiration and canonical authority of the Psalms are established by the most abundant and convincing evidence. They never were, and never can be, rejected, except by impious foes of the divine Revelation. Not to mention other ancient testimonies, we find complete evidence in the New Testament, where the book is quoted or referred to as divine by Christ and His apostles at least seventy times. No other writing is so frequently cited, Isaiah, the next in the scale of quotation, being cited only about fifty-five times. In every age of the Church, the Psalms have been extolled for their excellence and their use for godly edification (cf. 1 Cor. 14. 26).

Some critics refer many of the later psalms to the Maccabæan period; but Westcott points out that "they do not contain the slightest trace of those internal divisions of the people which were the most marked features of the Maccabæan struggle."

CLASSIFICATION OF THE PSALMS ACCORDING TO THEIR SUBJECTS.

I. Prayers.—1. For pardon of sin—Ps. 6, 25, 32, 38, 51, 130, 143.

2. Under deep affliction—Ps. 6, 7, 10, 13, 17, 22, 31, 35, 39, 41-43, 54-57, 59, 64, 69-71, 77, 86, 88, 94, 102, 109, 120, 140-143.

3. Of the church under persecution—Ps. 44, 60, 74, 79, 80, 83, 89, 94, 102, 123, 137.

4. Relative to public worship—Ps. 26, 27, 42, 43, 63, 65, 84, 92, 95-100, 118, 122, 132, 144-150.

5. Expressing trust in God—Ps. 3-5, 11, 12, 16, 20, 23, 27, 28, 31, 42, 43, 52, 54, 56, 57, 59, 61-64, 71, 77, 86, 108, 115, 118, 121, 125, 131, 138, 141.

6. Declaring the psalmist's integrity—Ps. 7, 17, 26, 35, 101, 119.

II. Thanksgivings.—1. For mercies shown to the psalmist—Ps. 9, 18, 30, 32, 34, 40, 61-63, 75, 103, 108, 116, 118, 138, 144.

2. To the church—Ps. 33, 46, 47, 65, 66, 68, 75, 76, 81, 85, 87, 95, 98, 105-107, 124, 126, 129, 134-136, 149.

III. Psalms of Praise.—1. Declaring God's goodness and mercy—Ps. 3, 4, 9, 16, 18, 30-34, 36, 40, 46, 65-68, 84, 85, 91, 99, 100, 103, 107, 111, 113, 116, 117, 121, 126, 145, 146.

2. God's power, majesty, and glory—Ps. 2, 3, 8, 18, 19, 24, 29, 33, 45-48, 50, 65-68, 76, 77, 89, 91-100, 104-108, 110, 111, 113-118, 135, 136, 139, 145-150.

IV. Psalms of Instruction.—1. Showing the blessings of God's people and the misery of His enemies—Ps. 1, 3-5, 7, 9-15, 17, 24, 25, 32, 34, 36, 37, 41, 50, 52, 53, 58, 62, 73, 75, 82, 84, 91, 92, 94, 101, 112, 119, 121, 125, 127-129, 133, 149.

2. The excellence of God's law—Ps. 19, 119.

3. The vanity of human life, etc.—Ps. 14, 39, 49, 53, 73, 90.

V. Prophetical and Typical Psalms.—Ps. 2, 16, 22, 24, 31, 35, 40, 41, 45, 50, 55, 68, 69, 72, 87, 88, 102, 109, 110, 118, 132.

VI. Historical Psalms.—Ps. 78, 105, 106, 135, 136.

PSALTERY [psal'tĕr-y]. [See MUSIC.]

PUBLICANS [pŭb'lĭ-cans]. The alien government, whether of Rome or of its deputy-princes, the Herods, collected its taxes and customs through speculators, who bought up the right of collecting the revenue (publicum) for their own advantage. These men were called publicani by the Romans. The corresponding word in the New Testament covers not only the tax-farmer, but also his collectors. These were often natives (Luke 5. 27; 19. 2, 9); and were classed by the Jews, not only with the social outcasts (Mat. 9. 10-13; 21. 31), but also with the heathen, as if outside Israel altogether (Mat. 18. 17). Christ's gracious attitude to them was therefore specially criticized (Mat. 9. 11; 11. 19), and his hopeful sympathy (Luke 18. 10-14) went to their heart (Luke 5. 29; 15. 1; 19. 7, 8).

PUL [pūl], king of Assyria = Tiglath Pileser III. [See ASSYRIA.]

PULSE [pŭlse] in Dan. 1. 12, 16 means grain of any sort.

PURPLE [pûr'ple] dye was obtained from a species of whelk abundant on the Phœnician coast. Purple garments were of great price (Judg. 8. 26; Luke 16. 19).

PYGARG [pȳ'gärg], A. V. and R. V. (only Deut. 14. 5), a white rumped antelope.

RAHAB [rā'hăb]. [See EGYPT.]

RAINS [rāins] fall in Palestine from October to April (Song of Sol. 2. 11). The beginning of the rainy season is called the "early," the end of it the "latter" rain, which includes the heavy showers expected in March and April (Joel 2. 23; cf. Jer. 3. 3).

REAPING [rēap'ing]. The corn ripened in April and May, beginning with the barley (2 Sam. 21. 9). The harvest, a time of general rejoicing (Ps. 4. 7; Isa. 9. 3), lasted six or seven weeks. The corn was cut with sickles (Joel 3. 13) half way down the stalk or close off by the ear. In the former case it was bound in sheaves (Ps. 126. 6). The Law forbade careful gleaning (Lev. 19. 9), that there might be a share for the poor (Ruth 2. 2).

RECEIVED TEXT [rē-çēived' tĕxt]. The text which is found in the modern printed Hebrew Bibles is that of the Massoretes (q.v.); and it is accepted by Jews and Christians alike as faithfully representing the work of these ancient scholars. The revisers of the Authorized Version "thought it most prudent," as they say in their preface, "to adopt the Massoretic text as the basis of their work, and to depart from it, as the authorized translators had done, only in exceptional cases." Where the Massoretic text itself offered alternative readings, the revisers have exercised their own judgment in selecting; and "in some few instances of extreme difficulty a reading has been adopted on the authority of the ancient versions, and the departure from the Massoretic text recorded in the margin." For the Received Text of the New Testament, see NEW TESTAMENT, TEXT OF THE.

RED SEA [rĕd sēa], Crossing of the. [See EXODUS.]

REFUGE [rĕf'ūje]. [See CITIES OF REFUGE.]

REVELATION [rĕv-ē-lā'tion], THE, was written by John (1. 1, 4, 9), probably about 95 or 96 A.D. It announces itself as a divine disclosure (1. 1), a prophetical book (1. 3; 22. 18, 19). It is characterized by the use of symbolical visions as the vehicle of prophecy. The model for this mode of prophecy was set by the book of Daniel. The theme of the book is the gradual triumph of the kingdom of God, culminating in the Second Advent; John 16. 33 may be said to be its text. While most expositors have agreed that this is the general drift of the difficult book of Revelation, they have differed greatly in its detailed interpretation. Between the prologue (1. 1-8) and epilogue (22. 6-21) the book is arranged in an ascending series of seven parallel sections, divided at 3. 22; 8. 1; 11. 19; 14. 20; 16. 21; and 19. 21. Others divide the book as follows: 3. 22; 11. 19; 14. 20; 16. 21; 19. 21; 20. 15; and 22. 5.

The Book of Revelation, also called Apocalypse (Greek for "revelation"), pictures the events of a future time in images and visions, especially Christ's coming as Judge of His enemies and Savior of His own. The Apocalypse is a book of divine comfort for the children of God especially in days of tribulation and is rich in doctrine and admonition. Since it is prophecy, however, and most of it in symbolical form, it must be interpreted in harmony with the clear texts of the Old and New Testaments and not according to human fancy.

REVISED VERSION [rē vīsed' vĕr'shon] OF 1881 AND 1885. The work of King James's revisers remained practically untouched for two hundred and seventy years. It is true that during this time many small changes were introduced into the text by successive printers, but no officially recognized revision took place. In 1870, a Convocation of the Church of England passed a resolution in favor of a revision of the King James Version. Two bodies of revisers were appointed—twenty-five for the Old Testament and twenty-six for the New.

Two companies of scholars in America coöperated in the work. The New Testament was issued in 1881, the Old Testament in 1885.

A recension of this work, called the American Standard Edition, and embodying many important emendations made by the American Revision Committee, was issued in 1901.

The American Standard Version, like all the versions, is of value as a commentary, giving varying translations of various passages. But as a version for the English-speaking people, it is not the equal of the Authorized Version. This is the judgment of experts in English literature. The British Committee on the revival of English Literature in a recent report declares that the Authorized Version is Great Britain's greatest literary inheritance.

But it is not in its literary merits alone that the American Standard Version comes short. In some of its translations it strikes serious blows at some of the essential teachings of the Scriptures. Prominent among them is the inspiration of the Scriptures and the deity of Christ. Its translation of 2 Timothy 3. 16 implies that parts of the Scriptures are not inspired. The very best of scholars have declared that the change from the Authorized Version, which reads, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God," is not justifiable. Again, John 9. 38, speaking of the blind man whom Jesus had healed, reads, "Lord, I believe. And he worshipped him." A foot-note in this version, speaking of the Greek word for worship, says: "The Greek word denotes an act of reverence, whether paid to a creature (as here), or to the Creator (see ch. 4. 20)." This declares Christ to be a creature and denies His deity; and this foot-note is an incorporate part of the publisher's contract, and cannot be omitted.

RHEIMS TESTAMENT AND DOUAY BIBLE. By 1582 a New Testament in English was prepared and printed by the English Roman Catholic College at Rheims. It contains many notes which endeavor to harmonize Roman teaching with the Bible. The Old Testament portion was issued at Douay in 1609-1610.

RIMMON [rĭm'mon], god of the Damascenes, same as Ramman of Assyria (q.v.).

RIVERS [rĭv'ers] OF THE BIBLE. 1. The streams of Palestine are the Rivers Jordan (q.v.), with its tributaries, the Yarmuk and Jabbok (Gen. 32. 22); Arnon, a tributary of the Dead Sea (Num. 21. 13-15); and Kishon, flowing into the Mediterranean (1 Kings 18. 40; Ps. 83. 9); and the brooks Besor, near Ziklag (1 Sam. 30. 9 ff.), Cherith (1 Kings 17. 5), Eshcol (Num. 13. 23), Kanah, north of Ephraim (Josh. 16. 8), and Kidron, beside Jerusalem (2 Sam. 15. 23; John 18. 1).

2. Abana and Pharpar (2 Kings 5. 12), rivers or canals of Damascus (q.v.; Chebar, a river or canal of Babylonia (Ezek. 1. 1, 3).

3. The great rivers Nile (Ex. 8. 6), Euphrates (Gen. 2. 14; 15. 18, etc.), and Hiddekel or Tigris (Gen. 2. 14; Dan. 10. 4), the last two, with Pison (Indus or Ganges?) and Gihon (Oxus?), being rivers of Eden in Gen. 2. 11-13.

ROCKS [rŏcks]. Clay, dust, earth, flint, lime, stone, and sand, are words of more or less frequent occurrence in the Bible; but, as they are employed in their ordinary sense, they require no comment. It may, however, be observed that the first-named was used in making bricks, which very commonly, as in Egypt and in Assyria, were not burnt but sun-dried. In this case, straw was often added to increase the tenacity of the material. Some of the limestones of Palestine and the adjacent regions, as well as those of Egypt, afford excellent building stones, and certain varieties can be polished. The former are generally of a very pale cream-color.

ROD [rŏd]. The "rod and staff" of Ps. 23. 4 probably refer to two instruments still used by Eastern shepherds, the first a heavy-headed club for driving off wild animals, the second a curved stick for guiding the sheep.

ROMANS [rō'mans], the Epistle to the, stands first among the Pauline letters, partly owing to its doctrinal importance, partly on account of its being addressed to the metropolis of the world. It falls into two divisions:—

I. Ch. 1-11 (Doctrinal). The first eight chapters set forth the grounds and consequences of the doctrine of justification by faith. The gospel is the power of God unto salvation, because it proclaims a righteousness furnished by God, and therefore satisfactory to God, and which man has not to earn but only to receive. All alike are guilty, and Gentile and Jew alike must accept God's favor as a gift. Thus was Abraham himself justified. In Christ this undeserved love and grace is revealed. Faith in Him cannot make us indifferent to holiness. Nay, dying with Christ, we shall with Him rise to newness of life, to God, and to all the hope and glory that come of fellowship with God. The next three chapters (9-11) illustrate historically the relations between the Jews and Gentiles in the kingdom of God.

II. (Practical) ch. 12-16. A rich and detailed exhibition of the conduct appropriate to Christians, closing (ch. 16) with a long list of greetings to "kinsmen" (cf. 2. 17 ff.) and other friends. The epistle was written at Corinth, probably in the spring of 57 A.D., and was specially occasioned by St. Paul's desire to pave the way for his intended visit to Rome (1. 10-16; 15. 23-32; cf. Acts 19. 21).

ROSE [rōse] (Song of Sol. 2. 1 and Isa. 35. 1) is the autumn crocus (R.V.), a narcissus or some other bulbous plant. The true roses are known only as mountain plants in Palestine.

its clearness, brightness, and beautiful pink-red color, like the sapphire, is a variety of the corundum [see ADAMANT]; but though the stone was known in classic times [see CARBUNCLE], it is uncertain what red stone is meant in the Old Testament. Some think it refers to red coral, but others consider that it should be translated as pearls. Of course, neither of these, properly speaking, is a gem.

RUE [rue] (Luke 11. 42), cultivated for a medicine.

RUSH [rŭsh] (Heb. agmon) is used twice in Isaiah (9. 14 and 19. 15) in a proverbial phrase to indicate something mean. The head, the palm branch, and the ancient and honorable man are opposed to the tail, the rush, and the lying prophet. The contrast between the tall palm with its crown of large feathery leaves and the rush suggests a small plant. The same Hebrew word is, however, applied to a plant that bowed its head before the wind (Isa. 58. 5), referring, no doubt, to such a plant as the reed.

RUTH [ruth], a Moabitess who, after her husband's death, accompanied her mother-in-law to Bethlehem, there married Boaz, and was thereby an ancestress of David. The book which is named after her, and tells her story, is an idyll of family life, often regarded as a supplement to the book of Judges, but probably of a later date (cf. 1. 1; and 4. 18–22).

S

SABBATH [săb'bath] (Heb. "rest," cf. Gen. 2. 1–3) occurs first in Ex. 16. 23, from which it is clear that it was observed before the giving of the Ten Commandments established it as an ordinance for the people of the Old Covenant. It was to be for the Jews a holy day on which no work should be done by man or beast. The scribes, who added innumerable restrictions and rules for the conduct of life under the Law, wrote entire treatises on Sabbath observance. Our Lord had many conflicts with the scribes on this account, and set Himself squarely against their interpretation of the Sabbath as contrary to the spirit of the original Law of the Sabbath (cf. Mat. 12. 3-5). Moreover, He announced His lordship also of the Sabbath (v. 8). Through His work the believers of the New Dispensation have been made free from the burdens of the Mosaic Law, hence also from the obligation of Sabbath legislation (Rom. 14. 5 f.; Col. 2, 16, 17).

SABBATICAL YEAR [săb-băt'i-eal yĕar] (Ex. 23. 10 ff.; Lev. 25. 1–7; Deut. 15. 1–11; 31. 10–13), every seventh year, during which, according to the law, the fields and vineyards were to be uncultivated, and their produce to be shared with the poor and the stranger and the beasts of the field. Debts of Israelites to Israelites were to be remitted. Alexander the Great and Julius Cæsar freed the Jews from taxes on the Sabbatical Years. After seven times seven Sabbatical Years there was appointed a Year of Jubilee, in which all lands that had been sold or forfeited returned to their original owners, and all slaves were set free (Lev. 25. 13, 14; 27. 16–24; 25. 39–54). Though there is no record of the actual observance of the Jubilee Year, it is frequently referred to in Scripture (Isa. 5. 7–10; 61. 1, 2; Ezek. 7. 12, 13; Neh. 5. 1–19).

SACRIFICES [săc'rĭ-fĭ-ces] were public (offered by the nation) or private (by an individual person). All sacrifices involved the slaying of an animal (cf. Heb. 9. 22). The vegetable offerings of the poor were accepted only through the blood of the public altar (Lev. 2. 2, 11, 14–16; 5. 11, 12).

Sacrifices were of three kinds:—

1. The whole BURNT OFFERING of entire self-dedication.

2. SIN OFFERING (described Lev. 6. 24 ff.) AND TRESPASS (Lev. 7. 1–10) OR GUILT OFFERING. Punishment could not be remitted by legal authorities for deliberate sins and capital crimes (Num. 15. 30, 31), but only for (1) unintentional sins; (2) non-capital crimes, e.g. theft, for which punishment had been endured; (3) sins which the guilty one confessed, making reparation.

3. PEACE OFFERINGS (Lev. 7. 11 ff.) were thank-offerings (7. 12 ff.), votive offerings, and freewill offerings (7. 16 ff.).

The sacrificial acts were five:—

1. Presentation of the sacrifice by the offerer; 2. Laying on of hands on the victim's head by the offerer (cf. Lev. 16. 21); 3. Slaughtering of the animal; 4. Pouring out or sprinkling of the blood (for special cases cf. Lev. 4. 6; 6. 30; 16. 14); 5. Burning the whole sacrifice, or its fat, on the altar.

SADDUCEES [săd'du-cees] (Zadokites), a party attached to the aristocratic priests who traced their lineage to the sons of Zadok (cf. Ezek. 40. 46), the chief ministers of the Temple from the time of Solomon. They were an exclusive caste, drawn from men of wealth and position (Acts 4. 1; 5. 17). While the Pharisees (q.v.) found their strongholds in the synagogues and schools of the towns and villages, the Sadducees had their centre in the Temple at Jerusalem. They were open to worldly influences of all kinds, including Greek culture and Roman statecraft. Their main interest was political, and their guiding principle was to keep in with any power that secured to them their monopoly of office. They acknowledged as binding only the written Law, rejecting the traditions of the scribes; ignored the Messianic hope and the doctrine of the resurrection; and denied alike the existence of angels and spirits and the overruling or coöperating hand of God in the actions of men (cf. Mark 12. 18–27; Luke 20. 27 ff.; Acts 23. 8).

SAFFRON [săf'frŏn] (Song of Sol. 4. 14) is a purple-flowered autumn crocus.

SAFFRON CROCUS.
With the pistil and its three-cleft style separate.

SALT [sălt] (Heb. melach, Gr. hals). Not uncommon in more than one part of Palestine, and abundant about the Dead Sea, beds of rock-salt occurring around its margin at various levels. Its waters also, on evaporation, deposit the mineral.

SALUTATIONS [săl'ū-tā'tĭons] among the Jews were: "Peace be with thee" (Judg. 19. 20; John 20. 26), and the like (cf. Gen. 43. 29; Ruth 2. 4). The reply was, "The Lord bless thee." It was only in great haste or intense absorption that they were omitted (2 Kings 4. 29; Luke 10. 4).

SAMARIA [sa-mā'ri-à], a city in Palestine west of Shechem, founded by Omri about 920 B.C. (1 Kings 16. 24). It was taken by Sargon in 722 B.C., and rebuilt by Herod the Great, who named it Sebaste. The province of Samaria, the central part of Palestine, stretched from the sea to the Jordan valley, coinciding with the land of the half-tribe of Manasseh.

SAMARITANS [sa-măr'i-tans], the mixed population, partly of Israelitish descent, which the restored exiles found in Northern Israel. They were the hated neighbors and rivals of the Jewish theocracy. "Samaritan" was to the Jew a name of contempt and reproach (John 8. 48).

SAMARITAN PENTATEUCH [sa-măr'i-tan pĕn'tà-teūch]. This ought hardly to be counted amongst the versions of the Old Testament, for it is little more than the Hebrew text written in the Samaritan (or Old Hebrew) characters. It is extant in MSS. of very nearly as great age as the Hebrew. [See OLD TESTAMENT, TEXT OF THE.]

SAMSON [săm'son] ("of the sun"), the last of the twelve judges (Judg. 13–16), the son of Manoah, was a native of Zorah, which belonged to Dan. He was a "Nazarite unto God" from his birth, the first Nazarite mentioned in Scripture (Judg. 13. 3–5; cf. Num. 6. 1–21). The narrative does not represent him as a leader of the people, either in war or peace; it consists of personal exploits against the Philistines.

SAMUEL [săm'u-el], THE FIRST AND SECOND BOOKS OF, are one in the Hebrew. The LXX divided them into two, calling the books of Samuel and Kings the four Books of Kings. First and Second Samuel contain the history of Israel from Eli to the old age of David. The name "Books of Samuel" is derived from the principal character of the period of Jewish history treated in these books. The author is not mentioned anywhere, and from 1 Sam. 25. 1; 28. 3 we are forced to conclude that Samuel himself was not the author. Very probably the author was a prophet who lived in the days of Solomon or soon after.

According to contents, the Books of Samuel may be divided into three portions: 1. The restoration of the theocracy under Samuel, the judge and prophet, 1 Sam. 1-7; 2. The history of Saul's reign, 1 Sam. 8-31; 3. The history of David's reign, 2 Sam. 1-24. Thus the books tell the story of the rise of the Jewish monarchy. The heart of the books is their lessons for the New Testament reader and their carrying forward of the line that led to the Redeemer of the world (especially 2 Sam. 7. 12-16; 23. 1-7).

SAMUEL [săm'u-el], the last of the Judges, an Ephraimite, who by wise administration in war and peace gained great authority in Israel, but had at last to yield to the popular wish, and resign his leadership to a king. He spent his later years at Rama, founding and directing schools of the prophets.

SANDAL [săn'dal], a sole of leather fastened to the foot by a strap or thong ("latchet," Gen. 14. 23; Luke 3. 16).

SANDALS.

SANHEDRIN [săn'hĕ-drĭn] (Gr. "council"), the senate, or supreme native court of justice for enforcing the Mosaic system of sacred law in national and civic life. It existed as early as the Grecian period. It sat under the presidency of the high-priest, and consisted of some seventy-one members (chief priests, elders, scribes), among whom the priestly aristocracy generally had the upper hand. It lost the power of life and death under the Romans (John 18. 31); though in moments of special excitement this limit was not always respected (Acts 6. 12; 7. 57, 58).

SAPPHIRE [săp'phīre] (Heb. sappir, Gr. sappheiros). Properly a blue variety of corundum [see ADAMANT], but in ancient times the name denoted the beautifully mottled blue stone now called lapis lazuli. This is a silicate of various bases, which is still much valued for ornaments. It was obtained in Ethiopia and Persia, and is not so hard as steel.

SARDIS [sär'dis] (Rev. 3. 1–6), capital of Lydia, was a wealthy commercial town, with a strong citadel.

SARDIUS [sär'dĭ-ŭs] or Sardine [sär'dine] (Heb. odem, Gr. sardion). A reddish translucent variety of chalcedony (q.v.), now called carnelian. The ancient name also included yellow-colored varieties.

SARDONYX [sär'dŏ-nyx] (Gr. sardonyx). A variety of onyx (q.v.); properly with three distinct tints in the layers.

SARGON [sär'gon]. [See ASSYRIA.]

SATYRS [sā'tyrs] (Heb. "hairy ones," Isa. 13. 21; 34. 14). Elsewhere the word means he-goats; but in these passages demons in the shape of goats, to whom the heathen sacrificed (Lev. 17. 7; cf. 2 Chr. 11. 15). Such satyrs are depicted on the Egyptian monuments.

SAUL [saul], son of Kish, of the tribe of Benjamin, the first king over Israel. He fought successfully against Moab, Ammon, Edom, Zobah, the Philistines, and the Amalekites (1 Sam. 14. 47, 48). Wilfulness in preferring sacrifice to obedience to the divine command before entering on the war against the Philistines, and violation of the curse (q.v.) against the Amalekites (1 Sam., ch. 15),—proofs of his failure in allegiance to Jehovah, the true king of Israel,—led to his rejection from being king (15. 26). "The Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and an evil spirit from the Lord troubled him" thenceforth (16. 14). In insane fury he sought to take the life of David (q.v.), and massacred the Gibeonites, and the priests of Nob. In the disastrous battle of Gilboa, where the brave Jonathan (q.v.) and two other sons of Saul were slain by the Philistines, he fell in despair upon his sword, and perished.

Stately in presence and heroic in action, he yet showed that one act of disobedience, one instance of unfaithfulness, may be the beginning of a fall from a divine call to the highest service. His chief weakness seems to have been want of decision of character. He was easily swayed by events and people.

SCAPEGOAT [scāpe'gōat'], the goat laden with the sins of the people, and driven away into the wilderness on the Day of Atonement. [See AZAZEL, and ATONEMENT, DAY OF.]

SCARLET [scär'lĕt]. [See CRIMSON.]

SCORPION [scôr'pĭ-ón] (Deut. 8. 15; Ezek. 2. 6; Luke 10. 19; 11. 12; Rev. 9. 3, 5, 10), a lobster-shaped animal, with eight legs, and a poisonous sting in the tail.

SCRIBES [scrībes] were the "scholars" or men of letters (John 7. 15), to whom belonged the professional study of the Mosaic Law. This special class of non-priestly Jews, beginning in the time of Ezra, had by the Maccabæan period taken this duty under their own peculiar care, and formed a body of traditional law, which, though ever growing by discussion as fresh cases arose, was regarded as equally binding with the written Mosaic Law. Their work included (1) a theoretic development of the Law to cover fresh cases; (2) the teaching of it gratuitously to "disciples" (Luke 2. 46; Mat. 21. 23; Mark 14. 49); (3) its practical administration in the courts, in which they sat as judges or assessors. They were addressed as "master," "lord," "sir" (Rabbi or Rabboni, Mat. 23. 7; Mark 10. 51); "master" (Mat. 8. 19; 23. 10; Luke 5. 5); "father" (Mat. 23. 9).

SCRIPTURE [skrĭp'tūre], or Scriptures, was first of all a general term, meaning simply "writing" or "writings." Then came the more precise designation "The Scripture" or "The Scriptures," as we find these terms employed in the New Testament to denote what were the sacred books of the Jews at the time, and we now speak of Scripture, Scriptures, or Holy Scripture when we mean the collected writings held sacred by the Christian Church. [See BIBLE.]

SCYTHIA [sçÿth'ĭ-ȧ] (Col. 3. 11), the country north of the Euxine and Caspian.

SCYTHIANS [sçÿth'ĭ-ans]. The name is only once met with in the Bible, Col. 3. 11, where it seems to be used of the Scythians who were settled in Asia Minor.

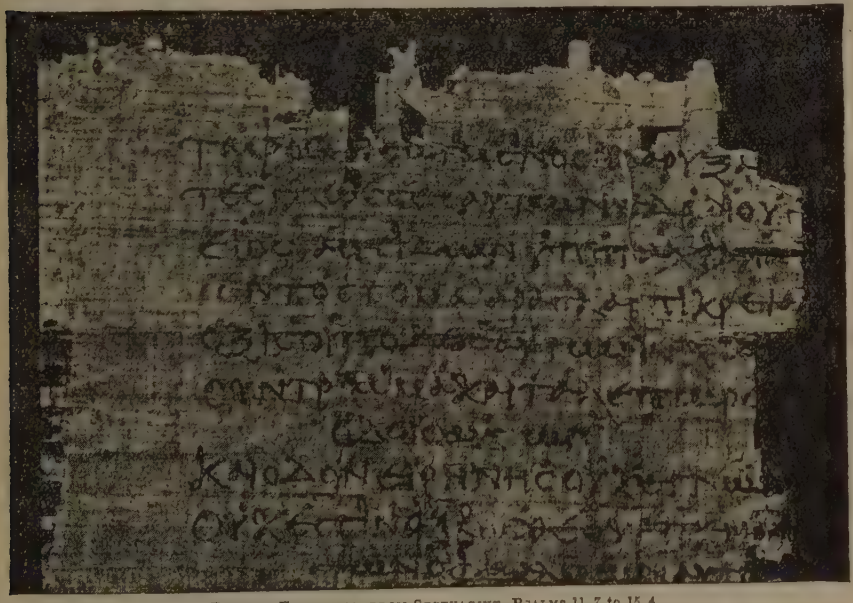
SEAL [sēal] (1 Kings 21. 8) or Signet [sĭg'nĕt] (Gen. 38. 18). Like other Eastern peoples (Babylonians, Egyptians), the Hebrews carried a ring in which was set a stone engraved with certain figures or characters. This being impressed on a tablet of clay or soft wax served as a signature and as a token of authenticity or authority (cf. Esther 8. 8; Neh. 9. 38, etc.). Sealing with such a signet was also applied to the tomb of Jesus (Mat. 27. 66), and to the book in Revelation. Metaphorically, it is used of circumcision (Rom. 4. 11), of the Holy Spirit (Eph. 4. 30), and of converts as the attestation of Paul's ministry (1 Cor. 9. 2).

SELAH [sē'lăh]. [See PSALMS.]

SEMITES [sēm'ītes]. The name means the descendants of Shem, and has been given to that portion of the white race which has spoken the "Semitic" languages: Assyro-Babylonian, Aramaic, Hebrew or Canaanite, Arabic, Himyaritic or South Arabic, and Ethiopic (the extinct language of Abyssinia). The first three constitute the northern division of the Semitic family of speech, the last three its southern division.

SENNACHERIB [sen-năch'e-rĭb]. [See ASSYRIA.]

SEPTUAGINT [sĕp'tū-ȧ-jĭnt] (LXX.). The chief authority, outside the Massoretic (or traditional) text, for the recovery of the primitive



PSALTER FRAGMENT, FROM SEPTUAGINT, PSALMS 11. 7 to 15. 4.

The earliest manuscript of any portion of the Bible at present known to be in existence. Written on papyrus, in uncial, in the third century. Found in Egypt in 1892. Now in the British Museum.

form of the Old Testament, is the translation made into the Greek language in Alexandria, which is called after the seventy interpreters who are supposed to have made it, the Septuagint (Lat. "seventy"). The legend of its formation is as follows. Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, at the suggestion of his librarian, Demetrius Phalereus, sent an embassy to Eleazar, the high priest at Jerusalem, to obtain copies of the sacred books of the Jewish law, in order to translate them into Greek. Superb copies were sent, and a body of translators, seventy or seventy-two in number, to whom quarters were assigned in the island of Pharos. A later tradition says that the translators were all shut up in separate cells, and that when they had finished their work, the translations were found to tally exactly.

There is no doubt that the Pentateuch was translated into Greek in Alexandria as early as the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus (284–246 B.C.). The true account of its origin is that, as there were in Alexandria many Jews who could not read the Old Testament in the original, a Greek version was gradually produced for their use in the third and second century B.C.; probably the whole work was completed by 150 B.C. It is, as a translation, very unequal, and it has come down to us in a state of great corruption; but, as this is the oldest translation of the Hebrew Bible, and as all the other early translations are made from it, with the exception of the Peshito Syriac and Jerome's Vulgate, its study is of prime importance. It is constantly quoted by the writers of the New Testament. [See JEWISH HISTORY BETWEEN THE TESTAMENTS.]

SERMON [sĕr'mŏn] ON THE MOUNT, the address which in Matthew (ch. 5-7) opens the public ministry of Jesus as the Messiah, and which sets up the eternal standards of judgment for righteousness of life. The "Mount of Beatitudes," supposed to have been near the Sea of Galilee, is not now to be identified. The Sermon on the Mount is an exposition of the nature of the kingdom of God and his righteousness. (Mat. ch. 5) It sets forth in the beatitudes (1-12) the character; and then, under the figures of the "salt of the earth" and "the light of the world" (13-16), the duty to the world of the citizens of the Kingdom. After showing that the better righteousness of the Kingdom comes to fulfil, and carry to perfection, not to destroy, what was good in the past (17-20), it proceeds to unfold that true righteousness with regard to the fifth (21-26), sixth (27-32), and the second commandments (33-37), to retaliation (38-42), and to loving one's neighbor and hating one's enemy (43-48).

Ch. 6 deals with the religious exercises of almsgiving, prayer, and fasting (1-18), and shows that the Christian's relation to his worldly property is to be without greed and avarice, without pursuit of by-ends, but with a single eye, and without anxiety (19-34).

Ch. 7 forbids rash judgment (1-5) and profanation of that which is holy (6), gives encouragement to prayer (7-11), lays down the "golden rule" of love (12), and enforces the necessity of religious decision; then, after describing the test which will distinguish false prophets from true (15-20) and false disciples from true (21-24), concludes with the double parable of the house and its foundation (24-29).

SERPENT [ser'pent]. Snakes form a distinct division of the class of reptiles, and are found in all but the coldest parts of the world. In Palestine more than thirty different kinds are known, of which six are poisonous and highly dangerous to man. All snakes were unclean (Lev. 11. 41, 42). Descriptive references are numerous (Gen. 3. 1; 3. 14; 49. 17; Prov. 30. 19; Isa. 65. 25; Mic. 7. 17). The Hebrew and Greek names being general, the translators' renderings are purposely vague: "serpent," "viper," "adder," "asp," "cockatrice." The last term (R. V. "basilisk") signifies a fabulous four-legged creature, with a tail and a cock's comb (Isa. 11. 8; 14. 29; 59. 5; Jer. 8. 17). Ps. 58. 4; Jas. 3. 7 refer to the "charming" or taming of the Egyptian cobra or spectacled snake. Gen. 49. 17 refers to the horned viper and the sand viper, which were perhaps the "fiery serpents" of Num. 21. 6, 8; Deut. 8. 15. In Isa. 14. 29; 30. 6, "fiery flying serpent" is either used as a figure of speech, or means the Egyptian cobra. In Isa. 27. 1, "leviathan the piercing serpent, that crooked serpent" is possibly a large python.

SHALMANESER [shăl-mă-nē'sẽr]. [See ASSYRIA.]

SHARON [shâr'on]. From Carmel to some low hills south of Joppa extends the plain or level of Sharon, once covered in the north by a considerable forest, but more cultivated in its southern part; scarce of cities till just off the mouth of Ajalon, called the valley of the smiths (cf. Neh. 11. 35 with 1 Sam. 13. 19), where lay Herod's Antipatris, Lydda, Ono, and the Arabic Ramleh, with Joppa as their harbor.

SHECHEM [shē'chem] (Gen. 12. 6, etc.), an ancient Hivite city in the valley between Ebal and Gerizim; the first meeting-place of Israel after the conquest, and the capital of Jeroboam; now a walled town of 15,000 inhabitants, including 140 Samaritans, the last survivors of that sect. In the modern synagogue are three ancient rolls of the law in Samaritan, the oldest dating perhaps from the sixth century A.D.

SHEEP [shēep], the first animal mentioned in the Bible (Gen, 4. 2). The plains on the coast, the wilderness of the south, the rolling downs of Moab and eastern Bashan, were and are pasture lands. Sheep were used for sacrifice; otherwise slain only for feasts, or to entertain guests. Ewe's milk was the most valued product of the flock; next in value was the wool. The common breed of to-day, with the enormous development of fat on the tail, seems to have been the ancient breed of Israel. (See Ex. 29. 22, and Lev. 3. 9, 11.) The Eastern shepherd's life was one of ceaseless watchfulness. At evening the flocks are folded in caves, or in enclosures on the open plain.

SHEPHERD [shĕp hẽrd]. The patriarchs lived a nomadic and pastoral life (Gen. 12. 16; 13. 5; 20. 14; 24. 35; 26. 14; 34. 28; 47. 17), and the children of Israel to a large extent continued to be shepherds after their settlement in Canaan. Mount Carmel (1 Sam. 25; Mic. 7. 14) Sharon (Isa. 65. 10), the hill country south of Hebron, Gilead (Mic. 7. 14), and Bashan (Deut. 32. 14; Ezek. 39. 18) were noted for their pastures. The laborious life of the shepherd is referred to by Jacob (Gen. 31. 40). Its characteristic features are the same to this day. The dress of a Syrian shepherd consists of a shirt of unbleached cotton, with a leathern girdle, and a large cloak of sheepskin, or wool, or hair, which also serves for a blanket at night. He carries a scrip (1 Sam. 17. 40), or provision-pouch, of kid-skin, a gourd for holding water or milk, an oak staff six feet long, and a weapon in the form of an oak club two feet long (the "rod" of Ps. 23, 4), the thick end of which is studded with nails. The shepherd stays with his sheep night and day. In the morning he counts them under his staff (Lev. 27. 32; Jer. 33. 13). They follow him to their pasture, and obey his call. At sunset they are folded in caves, or in enclosures made of rough stones (Num. 32. 16; 2 Chron. 32. 28), and the shepherd is lodged at night in a booth made of branches near the entrance, to be ready for their protection from thieves (1 Sam. 30. 20; Job 1. 17) and from wild beasts (1 Sam. 17. 34, 35).

"Shepherd" is a common designation of rulers (cf. 2 Sam. 5. 2; 7. 7; Jer. 23. 1 ff.). The intimate relation of the Eastern shepherd to his flock, and its entire dependence upon him, are often used to illustrate God's relation to His people (Ps. 23; 74. 1; 79. 13; 95. 7; Ezek. 34. 8; cf. Luke 15. 3-7, and John 10. 1-18).

SHEWBREAD [shew'brĕad'], Table of [See TABERNACLE.]

SHILOAH [shī-lō'ah] (Isa. 8. 6) or Siloam. [See JERUSALEM.]

SHILOH [shī'loh], a town of Ephraim, now Seilun, nine and a half miles north of Bethel, the site of the Tabernacle from the time of Joshua to that of Samuel (Josh. 18. 1, 8; 19. 51; Judg. 18. 31; 1 Sam. 1. 3, 9, 24; 2. 14; 3. 21; 4. 3; 14. 3; Jer. 7. 12), was the home of Eli and Samuel.

SHINAR [shī'nar]. [See BABYLONIA.]

SHISHAK [shī'shăk] (Egyptian Shashanq), the founder of the Egyptian Twenty-second Dynasty, has given, on the southern wall of the temple of

ONE OF SHISHAK'S JEWISH CAPTIVES.

Karnak, a list of the places he captured in Palestine. Most of them were in Judah; a few (e.g. Megiddo and Taanach) belonged to the northern kingdom. [See EGYPT.]

SHITTAH [shĭt'tăh] TREE, Shittim [shĭt'tĭm] Wood (R. V. acacia), a tree fifteen to twenty feet high, with hard, orange-red wood, growing in the valleys about the Dead Sea and in the desert southwards. The wood was used for the tabernacle.

SHUNEM [shu'nem], a village in the tribe of Issachar, north of Jezreel and south of Mount Gilboa (Josh. 19. 18), where Elisha was entertained by a rich woman, whose son he restored to life (2 Kings 4. 8-36).

SHUSHAN [shu'shan]. [See ELAMITES.]

SIDON [sī'don], or Zidon (Gen. 10. 15, 19, etc.; Mat. 11. 21, 22, etc.), a very ancient Canaanite city with a good port, north of Tyre. It is noticed on monuments as early as 1500 B.C., and was a centre of Phœnician trade. It is now a town of 10,000 inhabitants. The sarcophagus of Eshmunazar, who ruled Phœnicia and Sharon in the third century B.C., was found here.

SIGNET [sĭg'nĕt]. [See SEAL.]

SILOAM [sī-lō'am] (John 9. 7), Siloah [sī-lō'ah] (Neh. 3. 15), or Shiloah. [See JERUSALEM.]

SILVER [sĭl'vẽr] (Heb. keseph, Gr. argyros). An imported metal in Palestine, though a little may have been obtained in the Lebanon from an ore of lead (the sulphide), which is frequently argentiferous. Spain appears to have been one of the chief sources of supply in ancient times. It was used for money and for ornamental purposes, and was well known to the Egyptians in patriarchal ages.

SINAI [sī'năi]. [See MOUNTAINS.]

SINGING [sĭng'ing]. [See under MUSIC.]

SMYRNA [smyr'nà] (Rev. 2. 8-11) was founded by Alexander the Great at the head of the Gulf of Smyrna. On the slope of Mount Pagus are the remains of the great theatre, and the stadium, close to which St. Polycarp, the first bishop, suffered martyrdom.

SODOM [sŏd'om], one of the Cities of the Plain. [See GOMORRAH.]

SODOM, Vine of. [See GOURD.]

SOLOMON [sŏl'o-mon] ("peaceful," 1 Chron. 22. 9), son of David and Bathsheba, the third king of Israel. His history is narrated in 1 Kings ch. 1-11, and 2 Chron. ch. 1-9. In his brilliant reign the power of the kingdom reached its zenith. He stood on friendly terms with Egypt, and married a daughter of the Pharaoh. He maintained his authority over all the lands won by David (1 Kings 5. 4), and subjugated all the non-Israelite inhabitants of Palestine (9. 20, 21). His greatest achievement was the building of the Temple (q.v.). He built a palace for himself, and another for his Egyptian queen; also the "House of the forest of Lebanon," i.e. an arsenal on Zion, made of wood from Lebanon (7. 1-12), and completed the fortification of Jerusalem (11. 27). Not till all these works had been finished, in the twenty-fourth year of his reign, was the Temple consecrated (1 Kings 8). Solomon completed the transition of the kingdom which his father had consolidated into an Oriental despotism, establishing fortresses, increasing the army, introducing cavalry, and entering into great undertakings for the furtherance of trade with foreign nations. He formed an enormous harem, and was led away into idolatry under the influence of his heathen wives. The magnificence of his court was maintained by oppressive taxation, which, in the end, exasperated his subjects. The latter part of his reign did not fulfil the promise of its beginning, when, in the famous vision of Gibeon (1 Kings 3. 9), he chose wisdom before long life, gold, or victory, and God gave him, besides riches and honor, "a wise and understanding heart." Along with an extraordinary power of discerning human motives (1 Kings 3. 16 ff.), he had the gift of expressing his thoughts in pregnant sayings, which were famous even beyond his own country (10. 1-8). There was nothing in the realm of nature of which he could not speak (4. 33). He was pre-eminently skilled in that practical wisdom (described under ECCLESIASTES) which, based on religion, embraced all the moral problems of life, and was the founder of the literary form in which it is expressed in the Bible. [See PROVERBS.] The 72nd and 127th Psalms are ascribed to him. The collection of eighteen poems called the Psalms of Solomon, also called the "Psalms of the Pharisees," were written in Hebrew in the first century B.C., and are now extant only in a Greek translation. The Wisdom of Solomon (q.v.) was also attributed to him.

SONG OF SONGS [sŏng of sŏngs], i.e. the matchless song, is an allegory in which the author, King Solomon, pictures the intimate union of Jehovah with the communion of saints. Christ Himself, the heavenly Bridegroom is represented, in the character of Solomon (= the man of peace, cf. 1 Chron. 23. 9), as wooing Shulamith (=the peaceful one), His bride, the Holy Christian Church, and as loved by her and, when lost, sought by her with great lamenting and regained with eternal joy. Christ as Bridgegroom of the Church is an image familiar to every Bible reader (cf. Isa. 54. 5; 62. 5; Jer. 2. 2; Hos. 2. 19, 20; Mat. 9. 15; 22. 2; 25. 1; John 3. 29; 2 Cor. 11. 2; Eph. 5. 25-32; Rev. 19. 7; 21. 2; 22. 17).

SPIDER [spī'dēr]. In Prov. 30. 28, spider is perhaps the wall-lizard or gecko. [See LIZARD.]

SPIKENARD [spīke'nārd] (Mark 14. 3, John 12. 3, "pistic"—i.e. unadulterated—"nard"), a precious perfume from the root of a Himalayan plant, akin to valerian.

SPIRITUAL GIFTS [spĭr'itūal gĭfts]. The word charisma in the plural form is employed in the New Testament to denote extraordinary gifts of the Spirit bestowed upon Christians to equip them for the service of the Church. Various lists of the charismata are given (Rom. 12. 6-80; 1 Cor. 12. 4-11, 18-30; cf. Eph. 4. 7-12). Some of the gifts enumerated are given to all Christians, though some believers were then and are now endowed with them beyond their fellows. (Thus "Faith" 1 Cor. 12. 9; "Giving" and "Mercy" Rom. 12. 8; "Ministry" Rom. 12. 7.) Among the gifts of the Spirit in the narrower sense and the more prominent referred to in the apostolic writings are the following:—

1. Prophecy (Rom. 12. 6; 1 Cor. 12. 10, 28, 29), under which may be included exhortation (Rom. 12. 8; cf. 1 Cor. 14. 3). This refers to the gift of those who were able to set forth with grace and power the message of salvation (Rom. 12. 6), but is used also in the specific sense of the power to predict future events. Only a few of the Christian prophets are directly referred to (Acts 11. 27 f; 13. 1; 15. 32). Related to the gifts of prophecy and exhortation was the Discerning of Spirits (1 Cor. 12. 10, etc.). Prophecy was a gift for the speaker, discerning, the gift of listeners. By the spiritual discernment of his hearers, the truth of the prophets, their claim of divine authority was to be judged. The norm of inspired Truth was to be applied.

2. Working of Miracles (1 Cor. 12. 10, 28, 29). While a gift of practical beneficence, especially of the healing of diseases, this gift was in a special sense conferred as a means of confirming the truth and authenticating its messengers by way of a sign. In Romans 15. 18 ff. Paul refers to his miraculous gifts as an instrument which Christ used for the furtherance of the Gospel and the bringing of the Gentiles to obedience (cf. also Mark 16. 17, 18.).

3. The Gift of Tongues [See TONGUES, SPEAKING WITH]. The special gifts of the Spirit, especially the Gift of Tongues and the Working of Miracles, were employed by the Lord of the Church to confirm the word of His apostles to the nations bound in heathen superstition and idolatry. They are mentioned only in the early letters of Paul, and seem to have disappeared at an early age from the life of the Christian congregations.

STACTE [stăc'tē] (Ex. 30. 34), "a drop" [of sweet spice]; R. V. margin, "opobalsamum," but generally held to be storax, a gum-resin from the storax tree.

STEPHEN [stē'v'n] (Gr. "crown"), the first Christian martyr, one of the Seven who (Acts 6) were chosen for the special service of tables, i.e. the distribution of food to the poor. [See DEACON.] His gifts of inspired speech and miracle made him preëminent among the Seven. Accused of blasphemy against Moses and against God, he was condemned on the evidence of false witnesses. In his defense he showed by historical proof that the Jews had always resisted God's prophets, and at last had murdered the Messiah, and that the Temple was not an indispensable and indestructible institution of the religion of revelation. He was stoned to death, and "fell asleep" with a prayer on his lips, which was an echo of our Saviour's upon the cross (Luke 23. 34). Saul of Tarsus "was standing by, and consenting unto the death, and kept the raiment of them that slew him" (Acts 22. 19, 20; 7. 58; cf. Deut. 17. 5-7). The death of Stephen was the signal for the beginning of a general persecution of the Christians. [See PAUL (ST.).]

SULPHUR [sŭl'phŭr] (Heb. gophrith, Gr. theion). Sulphur springs and encrustations of sulphur are not uncommon near the Dead Sea.

SUMER, Sumerian. [See BABYLONIA.]

SWINE [swine], regarded by Jews (and Mohammedans) as the most unclean and polluting of animals.

SYCHAR [sy'chăr] (John 4. 5), a village about a mile east of Shechem, near Joseph's tomb and Jacob's well.

SYCOMORE [sy'o-mōre] (Amos 7. 14), a fig-tree with small fruit found in Palestine in and near towns.

SYNAGOGUE [sy'n'a-gŏgue] (Gr. "a meeting"), a Jewish meeting-house for worship. It served for church, law-court, and school, and was governed by local elders or "rulers" (Luke 13. 14; Mark 5. 22; Acts 13. 15; 18. 8), who had power to inflict various penalties, including scourging (Mat. 5. 22; 10. 17; Mark 13. 9; Luke 12. 11; 21. 12; 2 Cor. 11. 24) and excommunication (temporary and permanent). Meetings were held in the synagogue every Sabbath, and on the second and fifth days of the week. Worship was conducted by any one selected by the ruler on each occasion (Luke 4. 16 ff.; Acts 13. 15 ff.). The synagogues, first instituted after the Exile, were the chief means by which religious knowledge and spiritual fellowship were maintained among the people. The organization of the early Christian communities was largely moulded on the lines of the synagogue (see Jas. 2. 2; Acts 11. 30; 1 Pet. 5. 1).

SYRIA [sŷr'i-à] (Heb. Aram, "plain"), the region extending from Mount Taurus to Tyre, and from the Mediterranean to the Tigris. In New Testament times Syria included Western Aram only. It was under a Roman proconsul.

TABERNACLE [tăb'ĕr-nà-cle], The, was a movable sanctuary, erected by Moses in the wilderness of Sinai immediately after the Law was given. The materials used in its construction were acacia wood; goats' hair and rams' skins; the skins of a fish, perhaps the porpoise; linen, or possibly cotton; and gold, silver, and brass. It was called "the dwelling" (i.e. of Jehovah), "the tent of meeting" (i.e. of Jehovah with His people), and "the tent of the testimony" (Num. 9. 15; 18. 2).

It was an oblong tent, 30 cubits long by 10 broad, and 10 cubits high (Ex. 26. 15–30). It was placed at the western end of a court measuring 100 cubits by 50 (Ex. 27. 9–19).

The front or east end of the Tabernacle was a doorway of five pillars overlaid with gold, and hung with a curtain. The interior was divided into two apartments by four similar pillars, supporting a curtain (Ex. 26. 31–37). The western room, the Holy of Holies, measured 10 cubits in every direction; the eastern, the Sanctuary or Holy Place, was 20 cubits long by 10 in breadth and height.

The hangings were of four kinds: —

1. The ceiling, and apparently the walls, were hung with a curtain of white linen, blue, purple, and scarlet, and figured with cherubim (Ex. 26. 1–6).

2. The main external covering was made of curtains of goats' hair (Ex. 26. 7–13).

3. The double roof of red-dyed rams' skins and tachash (perhaps porpoise) skins was thrown over the covering of goats' hair (Ex. 26. 14).

4. The two veils, of fine and divers colored linen, one at the entrance to the Sanctuary, and the other in front of the Holy of Holies (Ex. 26. 31–37).

The Ark of the Covenant stood in the Holy of Holies. It was a chest two and a half cubits long by one and a half in breadth and height, of acacia wood overlaid with gold, and covered by a lid of solid gold, which was the mercy-seat (Ex. 25. 17). Two cherubim of gold stood on the mercy-seat. Two rings were attached to the ark on each side, for the poles of acacia wood, overlaid with gold, on which it was borne (Ex. 25. 10 ff.). In the ark were the two tables of the law; and by it were, for a time, a pot of manna and Aaron's rod that blossomed, and the book of the Law (Ex. 16. 33, 34; Num. 17. 10; Deut. 31. 26; 1 Kings 8. 9; cf. Heb. 9. 4). The cherubim were symbols of the presence of Jehovah (1 Sam. 4. 4; Num. 7. 89; Ex. 30. 6).

The Golden Altar or Altar of Incense, four cubits square and two high, also of acacia wood covered with gold, stood before the mercy-seat, in front of the veil in the Sanctuary (Ex. 30. 1–10; 40. 5; cf. Heb. 9. 4).

The Table of Shewbread stood on the northern side of the Sanctuary. It was two cubits long, one broad, and one and a half high, and was made of acacia wood, overlaid with gold. On it were displayed in two rows the twelve cakes called the Shewbread, or Bread of the Presence (Ex. 25. 23–30; Lev. 24. 5–9).

The Golden Candlestick stood on the south side of the Sanctuary. It consisted of a base and shaft with six branches and seven lamps (Ex. 25. 31–40; 27. 20; 30. 7, 8; Lev. 24. 2–4; 1 Sam. 3. 3; cf. Zech. 4).

The BRAZEN ALTAR, or ALTAR OF BURNT-OFFERING, stood in the outer court, in front of the Tabernacle. It was five cubits square and three cubits high, and made of acacia wood, overlaid with brass. It was at this altar that all sacrifices were offered (Ex. 27. 1–8).

The LAVER of brass stood upon a base of brass between the altar of burnt-offering and the door of the Tabernacle (Ex. 30. 17–21; 38. 8).

TABERNACLES [tăb'ĕr-nā-cles], Feast of. [See FEASTS.]

TALENT [tăl'ent]. [See under MONEY and WEIGHTS.]

TALMUD [tăl'mŭd] (from Heb. "to learn"), the fundamental code of the civil and canonical law of Rabbinical Judaism. It consists (1) of the Mishna ("repetition"), i.e. the Halacha, or traditional law, as it was committed to writing by Rabbi Judah the Holy (who died 219 A.D.) and his disciples, divided into 6 parts, comprising 63 treatises, or 524 chapters. A supplementary work called Tosephta was completed about 400 A.D. (2) The second part of the Talmud is the Gemara (completion), which is the interpretation of the Mishna. Of the Gemara there are two forms, the Palestinian, which originated in the school of Tiberias in Palestine about 250 A.D., and was completed about 400; and the Babylonian, which was developed in the school of Sura in Babylonia, and completed at 550. For the two methods of interpretation followed in the Talmud, see HALACHA and HAGGADA.

TAMMUZ [tăm'muz]. [See BABYLONIA.]

TARES [târes] (Mat. 13. 24–30), the bearded darnel.

TARGUMS [tär'gŭms]. When the Biblical Hebrew was no longer understood by the Aramaic-speaking peoples (just as Wycliffe's version (q.v.) would be unintelligible to a modern English congregation), it became necessary for a Meturgeman (i.e. a "dragoman" or qualified translator) to give the equivalent Aramaic when the Hebrew was read. This oral interpretation or Targum was at first of the simplest kind, but it gradually became more elaborate and was reduced to writing. The principal Targums are:—

1. The Targum of Onkelos on the Pentateuch, perhaps as old as the second century A.D.; and

2. The Targum of Jonathan Ben Uzziel on the Prophets and Historical Books, which is of later date.

TAXES [tăx'es]. Every Hebrew who had reached the age of twenty had to pay one-half shekel for the upkeep of the sanctuary (Ex. 30. 11–16; cf. 2 Kings 12. 4 ff.; 22. 4 ff.). Under Nehemiah one-third shekel was raised from every Israelite for the building of the temple (Neh. 10. 32 ff.). In later times the regular temple tax was one-half shekel (Mat. 17. 24). Civil taxes were at first unknown, but Samuel shows that they will be exacted under the monarchy (1 Sam. 8. 11–17). Large contributions in kind were required by Solomon (1 Kings 4. 7 ff.; cf. Amos 7. 1, where the first cutting of grass is called "the king's mowing"). Money taxes were only demanded in times of extraordinary necessity. Under the Persians the Jews were required to pay, not only excise and land-tax (Ezra. 4. 13; Neh. 5. 4), but also a capitation tax; and their condition under the Egyptian and Syrian rule became still harder (cf. 1 Macc. 15. 31, where Antiochus demands 1,000 talents; also 11. 28, 35). The taxes now began to be farmed, and this system was universal under the Roman domination, during which the Jews had to pay capitation and land taxes, as well as customs. [See PUBLICANS.]

TEIL [tēil] (Isa. 6. 13), old English name for lime tree (R.V. terebinth—q.v.).

TEL EL-AMARNA TABLETS, a collection of 296 clay tablets found at Tel-el-Amarna, in Egypt, in 1887. They consist of letters to Amenophis IV. (Khu-n-Aten) and his father, Amenophis III., from various kings of Western Asia, from Phœnician and Canaanite princes, written in cuneiform characters, and almost entirely in the Babylonian language, though only one or two of their writers were Babylonians. Their date is uncertain, but may be about 1400 and earlier. Israel is identified by some with the Khabiri of these letters, who are represented as ravaging the cities of Canaan.

TEMPLE [tĕm'ple]. SOLOMON'S TEMPLE took its plan from the Tabernacle; but its general dimensions were double those of the Tabernacle, and its furniture and decorations were on a grander scale. The Temple proper was 60 cubits long, 20 broad, and 30 high. It was built of stones dressed at the quarry, and roofed with cedar (1 Kings 6. 7, 9). The floors were of cypress overlaid with gold, and the walls were lined with cedar overlaid with gold. No stone was seen (1 Kings 6. 15, 18, 20, 22, 30; 2 Chr. 3. 5).

The Holy of Holies was a cube of 20 cubits, or 30 feet (1 Kings 6. 16, 20). In it were two cherubim of olive wood, overlaid with gold, each 10 cubits high, and with wings five cubits long (1 Kings 6. 23–28; 2 Chr. 3. 13). It was separated from the Sanctuary by a curtain, and by chains of gold and two doors of olive wood (1 Kings 6. 21, 31, 32).

The Holy Place, or Sanctuary, was 40 cubits long, 20 wide, and 30 high (1 Kings 6. 17). There were windows in its walls, probably near the roof. It contained the altar of incense, which was of cedar overlaid with gold (1 Kings 6. 20, 22; 7. 48), ten candlesticks, and ten tables, and was entered from the Holy Place by doors of cypress (6. 33, 34).

Against the two sides and rear of the Temple were three stories of rooms for officials and for storage (1 Kings 6. 5, 6, 8, 10); in front was a portico 10 cubits wide (1 Kings 6. 3; cf. 29, 30; 2 Chr. 3. 4), before which stood the brazen pillars called Boaz and Jachin, 18 cubits high with lotus-shaped capitals (1 Kings 7. 15–22; 2 Chr. 3. 15–17).

The courts of the Temple were two—the great court (2 Chr. 4. 9) for Israel, and the inner or upper court of the priests, walled off by a parapet (1 Kings 6. 36; 7. 12; Jer. 36. 10), and containing a brazen altar (2 Chr. 4. 1), a brazen sea standing on four groups of three oxen each (1 Kings 7. 23,

The Temple was burned by Nebuzar-adan, Nebuchadnezzar's general, 587 B.C. (2 Kings 25. 8, 9).

ZERUBBABEL'S TEMPLE was erected by the Jews under Zerubbabel on their return from captivity. It had the same general plan as the old, though with different proportions, and on a scale of less magnificence (Ezra 6. 3, 4). Begun September 24, 520, it was finished on March 3, 515 B.C. (Ezra 6. 15).

HEROD'S TEMPLE superseded Zerubbabel's. It was begun about 19 B.C., and was not finished till 63–64 A.D. (cf. John 2. 20). The area was enlarged to twice the former dimensions. The Temple proper reproduced the old plan, except that the height was 40 instead of 30 cubits. The Holy of Holies was separated from the Holy Place by a veil (Mat. 27. 51; Heb. 6. 19; 10. 20), and was empty. The exterior eastern end was flanked by two wings, making the front 100 cubits long. Beyond the court of the priests lay a large court, of which the part nearest the Sanctuary was reserved for men of Israel, the eastern portion for women of Israel. These were enclosed by a strong wall (Eph. 2. 14). The grand portal in the eastern wall was probably the Beautiful Gate (Acts 3. 2). Beyond these precincts was the large court of the Gentiles, where money changers sat, and traders exposed cattle for sale. [See JERUSALEM.]

TERAPHIM [tĕr'a-phĭm], images of ancestors, probably like the Roman Lares or household gods (Gen. 31. 19, 32–35; 1 Sam. 19. 13).

TEREBINTH [tĕr'ĕ-bĭnth], or turpentine tree, a kind of balsam, the R.V. gives for A.V. teil (Isa. 6. 13), elm (Hos. 4. 13).

THESSALONIANS [thĕs'sā-lō'nĭ-anz], the Epistles to the, two epistles written by St. Paul at Corinth in the year 52 or 53, occasioned by his interest in the church which he had founded within eighteen months before at Thessalonica, and which persecution had compelled him to leave (Acts 17. 1–10), and especially intended to correct their views as to the Second Coming of the Lord.

THESSALONICA [thĕs'sa-lo-nī'cā] (now Saloniki), in Macedonia, at the head of the Thermaic Gulf, was in St. Paul's time a free city governed by seven politarchs (Acts 17. 6, 8). Its public assembly or Demas is mentioned in Acts 17. 5. It was rebuilt by Cassander (315 B.C.), and renamed after his wife, sister of Alexander the Great, and from 146 B.C. was the seat of the Roman governors of Macedonia. A "free city," a great seaport, and the centre of the Via Egnatia, the great high road from the Adriatic to the Hellespont, it was, after Corinth, the second commercial city of the European Greeks, and it is now the second city of European Turkey.

THOMAS [thŏm'as] (Mat. 10. 3; Mark 3. 18; Luke 6. 15; Acts 1. 13), one of the twelve disciples of Jesus, in the Gospel of John called Didymus ("twin"), which is the Greek rendering of the Aramaic name (John 11. 16; 20. 24; 21. 2). The passages in John's Gospel (ch. 11, 14, and 20) in which Thomas appears, reveal the intense love that bound him to his Master. The image of the crucifixion filled his mind (20. 25), and his sorrow hid from him the glory of the Easter message; he must himself see before he could believe that his Lord was risen. Jesus, tenderly reproving him, granted him all that he desired; "and Thomas answered and said unto Him, 'My Lord and my God'" (20. 28).

There is an early tradition that Thomas preached the gospel in Parthia, and was buried at Edessa. The Syrian Christians of Malabar, the "Thomas-Christians," regarded him as the founder of their community.

THRESHING [thrĕsh'ĭng] (see Isa. 28. 24 ff.). Lighter grain, such as spelt and cummin, was beaten out with rods and flails (Isa. 28. 27); other kinds were threshed either (1) by the feet of cattle (Deut. 25. 4), or (2) by a threshing instrument, made either of planks studded with stones or iron (2 Sam. 24. 22), or of rollers spiked with iron "teeth" (Isa. 41. 15).

THYATIRA [thȳ'a-tī'rā] (Rev. 2. 18–29), on the Lycus, was an important town of Lydia, with a large Greek population, and noted for purple-dyeing and weaving. An inscription found there mentions its dyers' guild (cf. Acts 16. 14).

TIBERIAS [tī-bē'rĭ-as] (John 6. 1; 21. 1), built by Herod Antipas, on the west shore of the Sea of Galilee, and famous in the second century A.D. for its school of rabbis, and as the seat of the Sanhedrin, has now 2,000 inhabitants.

TIDAL [tī'dal] (Gen. 14. 9), identified by some scholars with the Babylonian ruler Tudhula.

TIGLATH-PILESER [tĭg'lath-pĭ-lē'sẽr]. [See ASSYRIA.]

TIMBREL [tĭm'brĕl]. [See MUSIC.]

TIMOTHY [tĭm'o-thȳ], an assistant and companion of St. Paul, had been trained in piety by his Jewish mother Eunice and grandmother Lois (2 Tim. 1. 5; 3. 14, 15). A convert of St. Paul's, he travelled in Macedonia and Greece, sometimes with the apostle, sometimes commissioned by him (cf. Acts 16. 4 to 20. 4; 1 Cor. 4. 17; 16. 10, 11; 2 Cor. 1. 1, 19; Rom. 16. 21; 1 Thes. 1. 1; 3. 2, 6; 2 Thes. 1. 1). He appears afterwards as the apostle's representative at Ephesus (1 Tim. 1. 3) and was at Rome while St. Paul was in prison there (Col. 1. 1; Philem. 1; Phil. 1. 1; 2. 19; 2 Tim. 4. 9, 21).

The First Epistle to Timothy, which has been compared to pearls of varied size and color loosely strung on one thread, must have been written between 64 and 67 A.D.; the Second was written about 67, and is the last of St. Paul's extant writings.

TIN [tĭn] (Heb. bedil, Gr. kassiteros]. The metal (obtained only from the oxide) has not been found in Palestine. It was, however, in use from the first, chiefly as a constituent of bronze. [See COPPER.] It was procured from Tyre, perhaps also from Egypt.

TINDALE'S TRANSLATIONS, 1525. William Tindale, a scholar of simple, earnest, heroic life, perceiving, as he tells us, "that it was impossible to establish the lay people in any truth, except the Scripture were plainly laid before their eyes, in their mother tongue," resolved to do this great task. And this through toil and exile, by ten years' unceasing labor, against the will of bishops and of princes, and finally at the sacrifice of his life, he did. In 1525, at Cologne, Peter Quentel began to print a quarto edition of Tindale's New Testament. The work was stopped by the magistrates, and Tindale fled to Worms, where Peter Shœffer printed for him an edition in octavo. Of these only three copies are now known to exist. One, a fragment of the quarto, is in the British Museum; the second, an imperfect copy of the octavo, is in the library of St. Paul's Cathedral; the third, also octavo, and lacking only the title, is in the library of the Baptist College, Bristol. These New Testaments began to reach England in 1526, and by order of Tunstal, Bishop of London, were burnt at Paul's Cross.

The chief aids Tindale used were the Greek New Testament of Erasmus (1519, 1522), the German New Testament of Luther (1523), and the Vulgate.

All subsequent scholars have done nothing more than improve in details his translation. He fixed for all subsequent workers the standard of diction and style of the English Bible. The vast bulk also of the words we still read are his. For example, in his version of John 10. 7-10, out of eighty-seven words, eighty stand in the A.V. exactly as in the 1525 New Testament, and of the same passage in the R.V. seventy-seven words are identical with the 1525 New Testament.

After his New Testament was proscribed in England, Tindale himself, though an exile, was in peril of his life. But he went to Marburg in Hesse, and there from the office of Hans Lufft issued in 1530 the Pentateuch, the first portion of the Old Testament which an Englishman could read in printed form in his mother-tongue. It is a thick small octavo, containing 384 folios or 768 pages, the page of type measuring 5 inches by 2¾. Genesis and Numbers are printed in black-letter, the other books in Roman type. This is one of the rarest and most precious of English books. The British Museum and the British and Foreign Bible Society possess very fine copies. Each book has a prologue written in the clear and beautiful English of the text.

As in the New Testament, so here, Tindale translated directly from the original text, using Luther and the Vulgate as aids. There are many marginal notes, and a few of these are strongly controversial, not a surprising fact when it is borne in mind that the authorities of the Romish Church rancorously hated alike the gospel and its restraints, and all who tried to make the gospel known to the common people. In 1534 Tindale issued a second edition, in which, however, the only book altered was Genesis, which was printed in Roman type, and from which almost all the notes of the first edition were omitted.

In 1534 Tindale issued at Antwerp, from the printing office of Martin Lampereur, a very carefully revised edition of his New Testament. This, like the Pentateuch, is a thick small octavo, the page of type measuring 5¼ inches by 2½. This book is a noble example of Tindale's thoroughness and care. Many of his most felicitous phrases are found here — e.g. "he came to himself," for the earlier "he remembered himself;" "am no more worthy," for "am not worthy;" "consider the lilies," for "behold the lilies," etc. Tindale was imprisoned at Antwerp in 1535, and was strangled at the stake October 6, 1536, a martyr to the Lutheran faith. At the time of his death at least seven editions of his New Testament had been published and circulated. There were also other "pirated" editions, of which, unfortunately, only one solitary specimen is known to have survived. This is in the British Museum, and is known as Joye's edition. [See ENGLISH BIBLE.]

TIRHAKAH [tĭr'ha-kah]. [See ASSYRIA and EGYPT.]

TITUS [tī'tus], an assistant of St. Paul in his apostolic work, accompanied that apostle to the council at Jerusalem as a Gentile Christian who had remained uncircumcised (Gal. 2. 1. 3). He afterwards appears as St. Paul's commissioner in Corinth (2 Cor. 2. 13; 7. 6, 13-15; 8. 6, 16, 23; 12. 18). The Epistle to Titus, which mentions (1. 5) that he was left by St. Paul in Crete, to organize the work there, and sets forth the duties of the pastoral office, and the virtues of domestic and social life, can scarcely have been earlier than Nero's persecution (64). The last mention of Titus is in 2 Tim. 4, 10.

TOBIT [tō'bit]. The Book of Tobit is one of the didactic group of Apocryphal writings. Tobit, the father, and Tobias, the son, who are the heroes of this fantastic legend of family life in the time of the Assyrian Captivity, are impersonations of the strictest legal piety. The book, which belongs to the first century B.C., was a favorite of the Jews, and was held in high esteem by many of the fathers of the Church. It abounds, however, in geographical, chronological, and historical mistakes, by its absurd miracles tends to promote superstition, and in a number of passages makes salvation depend on meritorious deeds. It introduces an angel (Raphael) who tells lies, and who attributes to the angels a kind of mediatorship ("I brought thy prayer before the Lord" 12. 12). To almsgiving such virtue is ascribed as to deliver from death and to purge away all sin (4. 10; 12. 9; 14. 10, 11). The value placed on this Apocryphal book by Roman Catholics is thus accounted for. We possess the Book of Tobit in Greek, Latin, and Aramaic. [See APOCRYPHA.]

TONGUES [tŭngs], Speaking with. St. Luke describes (Acts 2, 1-13) the marvellous gift of "other tongues," granted to the disciples on the Day of Pentecost. They spoke, "as the Spirit gave them utterance," in such a way that the strangers then in Jerusalem heard in their own tongues "the mighty works of God." In 1 Cor., ch. 12-14, St. Paul describes the spiritual gift of ecstatic speech which especially prevailed in the Corinthian church.

TOPAZ [tō'păz] (Heb. pitdah, Gr. topazion). The modern topaz is a silicate of alumina with fluorine, generally of a resin-yellow color, which is harder than all varieties of quartz, and thus considerably harder than steel; but the ancient topaz appears to have been the chrysolite (q.v.).

TOPHET [tō'phet]. [See JERUSALEM.]

TREASURY [trĕzh'u ry] or TREASURE [trĕzh'ure]. Three words are thus translated in the New Testament: —

(a) Treasury (Mark 12. 41, 43; Luke 21. 1; John 8. 20). The treasury-chamber contained thirteen brazen trumpet-shaped chests, which stood in the outer court of the women.

(b) Korbanas (Mat. 27. 6; see R.V. margin), the sacred treasure of the Jews, or, as Mark (7. 11) writes, "given (to God)."

(c) Treasure in the sense of treasure-house or treasure-chest (Mat. 2. 11; 13. 52) or treasure used figuratively (Mat. 6. 19, 20; 12. 35; 13. 44; 19, 21; Mark 10. 21; Luke 6. 45; 12. 33; 18. 22; 2 Cor. 4. 7; Col. 2. 3; Heb. 11. 26).

TRIBUTE [trĭb'ute]. —1. The sacred tribute (half a shekel), or the atonement-money, whose institution is recorded in Ex. 30. 13-16. In Nehemiah's day, the tribute appears to have been reduced to one-third of a shekel (Neh. 10. 32); but after the dispersion the tribute was restored to the original half-shekel, and this sum was regularly paid by Jews scattered throughout the world, for the maintenance of the Temple and its services.

TAX ABOLISHED.

In Mat. 17. 24 the marginal reading is didrachma, two Syrian drachmæ = about 1s. 4d., or 32 cents.

2. The civil tribute (Mat. 22. 17, 19; Mark 12. 14; Luke 20. 22; 23. 2), a tax paid annually to the Roman emperors by the inhabitants of Judæa after it became a Roman province. In the time of our Lord, this was a denarius or penny (q.v.). After the capture of Jerusalem and the destruction of the Temple, it was raised to the same amount as the sacred tribute mentioned above.

This tax was abolished at the accession of the Emperor Nerva (96 A.D.), but renewed by Hadrian.

TRUMPET [trŭmp'ĕt]. [See MUSIC.]

TYRE [tȳre] (Josh. 19. 29, etc.), a famous Phœnician seaport, claiming to have been founded about 2700 B.C. It had two ports, and colonies at Carthage (about 850 B.C.) and all over the Mediterranean. It was often attacked by Egypt and Assyria, and was taken by Alexander the Great after a terrible siege in 332 B.C. It is now a town of 3,000 inhabitants.

U

UNICORN [ū'nĭ-côrn] (A.V.; R.V. "wild ox," margin "ox-antelope"), doubtless the aurochs, the extinct wild ox described by Cæsar (Bell. Gall. 4. 29). (Cf. Deut. 33. 17; Job 39. 9–12; Ps. 50. 9, 10.) It is only once referred to after David's time (Isa. 34. 7). It appears in the sculptures of the later dynasties of Assyria till about 800 B.C.

UR [ûr] OF THE CHALDEES. [See ABRAHAM.]

URIM [ū'rĭm] AND THUMMIM [thŭm'mĭm] (Heb. "light and justice.") Two Hebrew words used with reference to a manner by which the high priest consulted God, and occurring first Ex. 28. 30, where the high priest's apparel is described. The objects called Urim and Thummim are not described in the Bible, nor is the manner in which the Lord was consulted by their means explained.

V

VERMILION [vĕr-mĭl'ĭon] (Heb. shasher, Gr. miltos). This scarlet pigment is a sulphide of mercury (cinnabar). Probably it came from Spain, where the mines of Almaden are still famous.

VERSIONS [vĕr'siȯns] (EARLIEST OF THE) NEW TESTAMENT. These give valuable evidence as to the state of the New Testament text at the time when it was translated. The earliest versions are believed to go back in some form to the second century. They are:—

1. SYRIAC VERSIONS.

(1.) Old Syriac (Lewis Syriac) from Mount Sinai, discovered in palimpsest, in the convent of Mount Sinai, in 1892, by Mrs. Lewis.

(2.) Old Syriac, called Cureton's Syriac, after its discoverer, who detected it amongst the treasures brought in 1842 from the Syrian convent in the Nitrian Desert to the British Museum.

(3.) Tatian's Harmony of the Four Gospels (? 160 A.D.), originally in Syriac, now extant only in Armenian and Arabic versions.

(5.) The Philoxenian Syriac is a literal Syriac version by Philoxenus (508 A.D.).

(6.) The Jerusalem or Palestinian Syriac is in very close connection with the Tatian Harmony and with the Old Syriac, and probably comes nearest to the speech of our Lord and His apostles.

The Armenian version is closely connected with the early Syriac.

2. THE LATIN VERSION.

(1.) Old Latin. An African version of the second century, known to us by the quotations of Cyprian in the third century, and, as far as the Gospels are concerned, in the Codex Bobiensis at Turin, and the Codex Palatinus at Vienna.

(2.) European Latin. A European version, of which the chief representatives, as regards the Gospels, are the Codex Vercellencis of the fourth century, the Codex Veronensis of the fifth century, and the Codex Colbertinus of the eleventh century.

(3.) The Itala and the Latin Vulgate. The work of revision of these Old Latin texts produces various modified types of text (called by Augustine the Itala, perhaps South Italian or Neapolitan), in greater accordance with the Greek, which lead up to the Vulgate (q.v.).

3. THE EGYPTIAN New Testament appears in a number of translations and dialects, of which the chief are:—

(1.) Coptic or Memphitic. The Coptic or Memphitic version of Lower Egypt, sometimes called Bohairic, which is supposed to have been made as early as the close of the second century.

(2.) Thebaic or Sahidic. The Thebaic or Sahidic version of Upper Egypt, which is assigned to a slightly later date than the Memphitic.

(3.) Fayyûmic. The Fayyûm version, of which fragments are reported to have recently been recovered.

None of these versions or dialects has as yet been properly edited or studied.

Closely connected with the Egyptian versions, but not necessarily wholly dependent upon them, is the version in Ethiopic, which is still the ecclesiastical language of the Abyssinians.

Other versions of more or less importance are the Gothic, the Slavonic, the Anglo-Saxon, etc. [See NEW TESTAMENT, TEXT OF THE.]

VINE [vine], VINEYARD [vĭne'yard]. The vine was early cultivated in Canaan (Gen. 9. 20, 21). Names of places, like Eschol ("cluster"), Gath ("winepress"), etc., and the numbers of old winepresses found in the country, attest its prevalence. Wine (or must) is often named in Scripture, along with corn and oil, as one of the chief products of the country (Deut. 6. 11; 7. 13; 8. 8; Jer. 5. 17; 39. 10; Hos. 2. 8). The districts of Hebron and the Lebanon were and are now famous for the excellence of their vines (Num. 13. 22–24; Hos. 14. 7). In ancient times it appears that dark-red or blue grapes were the chief sorts (cf. "blood of grapes," Gen. 49. 11, etc.); in modern Palestine white wine is the most common. Vineyards on hills, where the plough could not be used, were tilled with the mattock, provided with terrace-walls, to prevent the earth from being washed away, and protected with hedges or walls (Num. 22. 24, 25; Isa. 5. 5; 17. 11) from cattle and wild beasts. The workers or watchers lived in huts or watch-towers (Isa. 5. 2; Job 27. 18). The grapes were trodden in the winepress (Isa. 16. 10), which was often hewn out of the rock, and beside it, lower down, was the vat into which the must flowed, and from which it was drawn into pitchers and skins (Jer. 48. 11; Job 32. 19). The vintage, in September and October, was a time of general rejoicing (Judg. 9. 27; Isa. 16. 10). Grapes were often dried and pressed into cakes (1 Sam. 25. 18; 2 Sam. 6. 19; Hos. 3. 1).

VOWS, in the Old Testament, are solemn promises to offer sacrifices, etc., to God in return for His help, or to abstain from some legitimate enjoyment for His sake. Such vows are voluntary (Deut. 23. 22), and are not to be lightly made (Prov. 20. 25); once made, they are to be inviolate (Num. 30. 3; Deut. 23. 21, 23; Eccl. 5. 3, 4). Our Lord only once mentions vows (Mat. 15. 5–9; Mark 7. 11–13), condemning those who give to God what should go to support their parents. St. Paul, at Jerusalem, took part in a Nazarite vow (Acts 21. 24–26), and made or fulfilled a similar vow at Cenchreæ (Acts 18. 18). [See NAZARITES.]

VULGATE [vŭl'gāte] (Lat. versio vulgata, "common version"), the great work of Jerome, who in 383 A.D. was commissioned by Pope Damasus to revise the Latin Bible. The result of his labors is the Latin Vulgate, of which a vast number of MSS. are extant. Probably the best text of all for determining the text of the Vulgate as Jerome left it is the Codex Amiatinus, which was written shortly before the year 716 A.D. either at Wearmouth or at Jarrow in Northumberland, by the command of Ceolfrid the Abbot, as a votive offering for the Pope of Rome. Ceolfrid died on the journey to Rome, and the fortunes of the book after his death are unknown; it was probably presented to the Pope in due course, and ultimately found its way into the monastery of Monte Amiata, after which it is named. It is now in Florence.

THE LATIN BIBLE OF ST. JEROME'S VERSION (Job 1). [Commonly known as the Vulgate.]

The revision of the Old Testament part was made by Jerome in Bethlehem between the years 392-404 A.D., by direct reference to the Hebrew, of which language he had made himself master somewhat late in life. The work of revision is very unequally done; some books underwent very little change, others were more carefully treated. In spite of its many mistranslations, the Council of Trent, 1563, made the Vulgate the standard of Catholic faith and doctrine, thus placing it above the Hebrew and Greek originals. It was found, however, that there were so many glaring errors in the text accepted as standard that several revisions had to be made. Readings which support Roman Catholic error are carefully conserved. To this date the Vulgate translates Gen. 3. 15: "She shall bruise thy head" (applied to Mary by Catholic theologians), and retains Eph. 5. 32: "This is a great sacrament" (used to confirm the dogma that marriage is a sacrament), instead of: "This is a great mystery." [See Old Testament, Text of the, and Versions of the New Testament.]

WEASEL [wē'zĕl] (Heb. chôled) occurs only in the list of unclean beasts in Lev. 11. 29. There is no reason to reject the accepted translation. Weasels, and also polecats, are common in Palestine, and perhaps others of the genus, while genets and ichneumons (Herpestes ichneumon), which also occur, would probably be embraced under the same term.

WEIGHTS among the Hebrews, as among most other nations of Western Asia, were regulated according to the scale of Assyria and Babylonia. That the weight talent consisted of 60 manehs, of 60 shekels each (cf. Ezek. 45. 12), is now clear from the discovery of Assyrian standard weights in the shape of recumbent lions (of bronze), and ducks (of stone), with their values inscribed both in Aramaic and Assyrian, the Assyrian giving also the name of the reigning king. With the help of these weights (a number of which are in the British Museum), and other extant Asiatic weights and coins, it is now proved that the Babylonian-Assyrian talent of weight was = 133.6 lbs. avoir., and that there was also a light talent = 66.8 lbs. avoir. The Hebrew talent of weight was, however, about 130 lbs., the maneh 2 lbs. $\frac{1}{3}$ oz., the shekel $\frac{2}{3}$ oz. avoir.; and the Hebrew shekel was divisible into 20 gerahs, each about $\frac{1}{20}$ oz., of which 10 made a $\frac{1}{2}$ shekel or bekah, about $\frac{1}{3}$ oz. avoir. This weight was in ancient Israel called "king's weight" (2 Sam. 14. 26), from the "maneh of the king" which was its basis; and the above shekel ($\frac{2}{3}$ oz. avoir.) was called "holy" (Ex. 30. 13; 38. 25, etc.), perhaps from its standard being preserved in the Temple, as distinguished from the silver shekel, which was about $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. avoir. [See also Money.]

Pound in the Old Testament = maneh (1 Kings 10. 17; Ezra 2. 69; Neh. 7. 71, 72); in the New Testament is the Roman pound of 12 oz. = 13 oz. avoir. (John 12. 3; 19. 39).

Talent	1
Maneh	60	1
Shekel	3,600	60	1
Bekah	7,200	120	2	1
Gerah	14,400	1,200	20	10	1

WELLS [wĕlls]. In a land of few rivers, where rain fell only at certain seasons, wells were of the utmost importance (cf. Gen. 21. 25). They were artificial ponds or pits sunk in the ground, in which the rain-water collected and was preserved. Springs of "living water" were called by a different name, 'Ain.

WHALE [whāle], A.V.; "sea monster," R.V. (Heb. tannîn). In three passages tannîn is thus translated; in others, "dragon" or "leviathan." In the account of creation, it refers evidently to all the great creatures which inhabit the seas, including whales especially. The word does not occur in the account of Jonah, but simply "a great fish," and we have no clue to its species. Many species of whales, or cetacea, are found in the Mediterranean and Red Sea, and we know from ancient writers that formerly many of the larger whales existed there, which have been exterminated, or nearly so, even in our northern seas, such as the extinct Biscayan whale.

WHEAT [whēat] was the chief food grain of Mesopotamia in Jacob's time (Gen. 30. 14). It was and is still much cultivated in Egypt and Syria.

WILDERNESS [wĭl'dẽr-nĕss] in Scripture generally denotes open, uncultivated ground, suitable for pasture (Ps. 65. 12; Isa. 42. 11; Jer. 23. 10; Joel 1. 19; 2. 22). The wilderness of Judæa (Mat. 3. 1), the Jeshimon of 1 Sam. 23. 19, lies between the Dead Sea and the district of Hebron. The "wilderness of the wanderings" is the northern part of the Sinaitic Peninsula, the western region of which is named the "wilderness of Shur," and the eastern the "wilderness of Paran."

WILLOW [wĭl'lō̆w] (Ezek. 17. 5). Of this there are eight species in Palestine. "Willow" in Lev. 23. 40, Job 40. 22, Isa. 15. 7, 44. 4 is probably oleander; in Ps. 137. 2 probably poplar.

WINE [wīne] was abundant in Palestine (Num. 13. 24; Deut. 6. 11; 7. 13; 8. 8; Isa. 5. 7; Hos. 2. 8, 12, 15), and was drunk, partly as sweet must (Judg. 9. 13; Hos. 4. 11), partly after fermenting and settling on the lees (cf. Zeph. 1. 12). It was an old custom to add spices (Song of Sol. 8. 2; Isa. 5. 22; Prov. 9. 2, 5). Wine before being drunk was commonly filtered, to remove dregs and insects (Isa. 25. 6; Jer. 48. 11; Mat. 23. 24). The vice of drunkenness is frequently referred to (e.g. 1 Sam. 1. 13; 25. 36; 2 Sam. 11. 13; Isa. 5. 22; Hos. 7. 5; Jer. 23. 9; 1 Thess. 5. 7), and there are many emphatic warnings against it in Scripture (Luke 21. 34; Rom. 13. 13; Eph. 5. 18; 1 Tim. 3. 8; Titus 1. 7). The Rechabites (Jer. 35) and Nazarites (Judg. 13. 4, 5; Luke 1. 15; 7. 33) abstained from wine. The priests were forbidden to use it when engaged in their sacred duties (Lev. 10. 9-11). A drink-offering of wine was presented with the daily sacrifice (Ex. 29. 40, 41), with the offering of the first fruits (Lev. 23. 13), and with various other sacrifices (Num. 15. 5-10).

WINNOWING [wĭn'nō̆w-ĭng]. After the corn was threshed, it was winnowed (Ruth 3. 2) by being tossed in the air with shovels or forks (Isa. 30. 28) after the night-wind had begun to blow (Jer. 4. 11). The grain then fell to the ground, and the chaff was blown away (Ps. 1. 4).

WISDOM [wĭs'dŏm]. [See under Proverbs.]

WISDOM OF SOLOMON [wĭs'dŏm of sŏl'o-mon]. This book, together with the Wisdom of the Son of Sirach, or Ecclesiasticus (q.v.), belongs to the class of sapiential books which is represented within the limits of the Canon by Job, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes.

The Wisdom of Solomon has nothing to do with Solomon, and is not older than the first (or perhaps second) century B.C. It was written in Greek by an Alexandrian Jew. It is a noble work, and was so highly esteemed by the Christian church that it came nearer to canonical acceptance than any other part of the Apocrypha (q.v.). Some portions of it which discuss the praise of wisdom, and the rewards and punishments which are attached respectively to the just and the unjust, have always been much admired, and some of its sentences have become proverbial—e.g. ch. 7. 27, "In all ages wisdom entereth into holy souls, and maketh them friends of God and prophets"; ch. 3. 1, "The souls of the righteous are in the hands of God, and there shall no torment touch them."

WOLF [Heb. zêêb (canis lupus)]. The wolf is everywhere known as the terror of the sheepfold. The wolf of Syria is the same as that of Europe, and formerly of Britain. The wolf is often spoken of in Scripture as the emblem of ferocity and bloodthirstiness.

WORM (Isa. 51. 8), the larva of the clothes-moth. [See MOTH.] Ps. 22. 6; Isa. 41. 14 refer to an earthworm. In the majority of passages maggots or larvæ of flies are understood (Ex. 16. 24; Job 19. 26; 21. 26).

WORMWOOD, often alluded to in Scripture by way of illustration. Five species occur in Palestine.

WRITING (HEBREW) [rīt'ĭng (hē'brēw)]. From notices in the Old Testament we learn that the Jews wrote their books with ink on rolls of smoothed sheepskin or goatskin, with a staff attached to each end. The rolls were not written across, but from end to end, the writing being arranged in columns. When a roll was read, the beginning of it was at the reader's right hand, the end at his left. When a column had been read, it was rolled round the right-hand staff, and a new column was unrolled from the left-hand one. According to Jewish tradition, the square character now in use was introduced by Ezra. Subsequent to the Restoration, the scribes transcribed from the old character to the new such books as were written in the former. This was a task of great delicacy, on account of the condition of the texts and the dangers of error. In Hebrew writing originally only the consonants of the words were written, the vowels being supplied by the reader. In such a mode of writing, the same combination of consonants may be pronounced differently—thus, to take an English example, the consonants BRD may be read bird, bard, broad, bread, etc., and the appropriate pronunciation must in each case be determined by the context. The danger in copying such a text was that the mind of the scribe would be continually engaged on the sense while his hand and eye were engaged on the form, or else that he would slavishly copy the letters without regarding the sense; and on either hand there was the risk of mistake, all the more that several letters in both scripts closely resembled one another, and that there was no system of punctuation, nor clear spacing between words. Such was the care, however, with which the transcribers were inspired by their veneration of the text, that the Hebrew MSS. contain very few variant readings. [See MASSORETES.]

WYCLIFFE'S VERSION, of which the New Testament was completed about 1380, and the Old Testament in 1382, was the first rendering of the whole Bible into English. It was a plain and literal translation from the Latin Vulgate (q.v.). Another complete translation was made by Wycliffe's friend, John Purvey, between 1384 and 1388. Both versions were widely circulated in MS. [See ENGLISH BIBLE.]

YOKE [yōke] (Deut. 21. 3). Animals engaged in ploughing were united to one another and to the shaft of the plough by a yoke, which was a framework of wood, or wood and leather, passing round the breast of each. The yoke was always double. And thus the "yoke" of Christ (Mat. 11. 29) is one which unites to Him and divides the burden.

Z

ZEALOTS [zĕal'ŏts], the extreme wing of the national party, in which the Pharisees represented the policy of passive resistance. From Herod the Great's time to the fall of Jerusalem in 70 A.D. they were in a constant state of ferment (Acts 5. 36, 37). Their headquarters were in Galilee. "Cananæan" is the Hebrew equivalent of Zealot (Mark 3. 18; Luke 6. 15). [See GALILÆANS.]

ZECHARIAH [zĕch'a-rī'ah] ("Jehovah hath remembered"), a name borne by Old Testament kings, priests, and prophets, the most notable being the son of Berechiah (Neh. 12. 4, 16), a coadjutor of Haggai in promoting the rebuilding of the Temple (Ezra 5. 1; 6. 14), who prophesied in 520 and 518 B.C. (Zech. 1. 1, 7; 7. 1). His prophecy consists of three parts: 1. A series of visions of the Church of God in the age of the New Covenant (ch. 1-6). 2. Two addresses containing admonition (ch. 7) and promise (ch. 8). 3. A prophetic description of the future destiny of God's people. [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

ZEPHANIAH [zĕph'a-nī'ah] ("Jehovah hides") prophesied in the time of Josiah (1. 1), and before the fall of Nineveh (606 B.C.; cf. 2. 13), for the warning of Judah and Jerusalem. The great day of the Lord's judgment is near (ch. 1), the neighboring nations are about to fall (ch. 2), Jerusalem is urged to repent (3. 1-7), the faithful remnant will be gathered, and the peoples will serve Jehovah with one consent (3. 8-20). The hymn of the world's judgment, Dies iræ, dies illa ("That day of wrath, that dreadful day"), was taken by Thomas of Celano (13th century) from Zephaniah (1. 14-18). [See MINOR PROPHETS.]

ZERUBBABEL [ze-rūb'ba-bĕl] ("dispersed," or "born in Babylon"), a descendant of the kings of Judah, was permitted by Cyrus to lead back the Jews from exile in 538 B.C. He saw the completion of the new Temple (q.v.) in 515 B.C.

The Book of Revelation is saturated with the Old Testament from beginning to end—there being nearly four hundred references to thoughts and events mentioned in the Law, the Prophets, and the Writings. Too numerous to tabulate in the space at command, the student will find ample marginal references to fasten each such incident in its proper Old Testament locality. [he that made it.
